ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: If I talk I again with my mother about this she will stop my going with my boy friend altogether, so I've got to ask your advice. . . . I am only a year and we are very much in love. We get a kick out of just being together, and I'm so at home with him that I can talk self-conscious. I went with three others before I met him, so I think know myself now.

"We want to plan our marriage when I am 18, and Mom and Dad won't hear of it. (For modern parents, they are very oldand his family, but they object to my wearing his ring. He is sensible and insists I finish school, but he does want to be engaged right away.

"Shall I wear his ring or not? My sister, who got married when she was my age, says I can always give it back. I just wan everybody to know we belong to each other, but my family think I am going too young to give that impresssion. What do you say? CONFUSED"

You say that if you do * change your mind you can always give the ring back, Too many girls marry with the same reservation: "If anything happens I can always get a divorce." Your mother wants your marriage to last for the rest of your life, and I am sure you do too. Why not do as she asks, and play safe?

*Planning it all now will tie you to this lad and set your mind in a plaster cast, so to speak, which precludes any possibility that one day you will change it. I urge you to swing along with your mother's opinon. You will not be sorry.

How The Moth Attracts A Mate

One of nature's most baffling phenomena has been the extraordinary power of female moths to attract males over long distances. In one experiment, a female emperor in a gauze cage collected 127 males of her species in seven hours; male Chinese silkworm moths have been known to home in on intended mates from as far away as seven miles. Since a stir nothing in males on the outside only inches away, biologists have concluded that the secret of her charm must be an odour-from a substance so strong that a few molecules send males fluttering into the wind, and so selective that only males of her own species are attracted. In a massive experiment conducted by Adolf Butenandt, 56, who was co-winner of the 1939 Nobel Prize in Chemistry (for isolating the male sex hormone, androsterone), a research team at Munich's Max Planck Institute for Biochemistry import-ed 1,000,000 silkworm eccons from Italy and Japan, opened them up with razor blade parated the pupae of 310,000 females from the males. Tables of average heights and weights for children have been so overpromoted that many mothers spend their time jittering needlessly about whether a youngster is up to par. But doctors have never studied data on averages for people at the upper end of the life span. Last months br. Arthur M. Master presented the A.M.A. with revealing data on oldsters aged on 2,925 men and 2,694 women all over the U.S. In the 65-69 bracket, the tables showed men average 5 ft. 8 in. tall, weigh 159 lbs. Height remains constant through ages 85-89, but by then the average weight has dropped to 148 lbs. In the early 90's, men average an inch shorter and tip the scales at a wispy 136 lbs. Women aged 65-69 average 5 ft. 3 in. tall and weigh 141 lbs.; those in the upper 80's are an die younger, height has nothing to do with longevity. Weight is the villain, Dr. Master concluded. "It is clear that obesity reduces the life span, and the outlook for thin persons is more favorable." That average weights are so much less in the most aged might indicate that these individuals have actually lost some weight, but more sig-nificant, Dr. Master suggested, is the fact that the fat die younger. - From TIME
