Well, that little time this year. It won't be too bird must surely have got his signals crossed because last week soon for some our neighbours as wasn't exactly the happiest we've known. And all on acout all right but we shall put count of blackflies. When we were up at Ginger Farm three weeks ago Partner got a few bites on his forehead. They were itchy but no worse than bites usually are. Two weeks later a big hard lump came up in front of one ear. The swelling spread into Partner's neck and up to one eye. The other side of his face was also getting stiff a rotten cold - tonsilitis and summer colds seem to be quite prevalent just now. Other events last week were of a happier nature. One day we had callers - neighbours when we were at Ginger Farm. They came to warn us we were going to be neighbours again. "Neighbours", I exclaimed, "what do you mean?" "Just what I said. We have sold our farm and have bought a house in that subdivision just across the road from

Well, that was a surprise. Of course we had to go and see the house - in the much publisized Credit Woodlands. It is a wonderful house, but not quite finished. Split level, four-piece main bathroom, two-piece washroom off the master bedroom, shower and washroom in the pasement and a sink in the recreation room. Time was when we were glad to have a bathroom at all. Now a one-bathroom house is completely out of date. Of course this lovely house was on the usual small lot and when we all came back here I thought I detected a look of envy in our neighbours' eyes as we walked around our spacious lot. How ever, it all depends on what a person wants. I guess we would rather be a small toad in a big puddle than a big toad in a small puddle. Our friends may have quite a different reason for locating where they have Incidentally the fact that our former neighbours have sold farm means that ou: faithful old Rusty must be adoo ed by yet another family. Child's Kiss Saves Her Father's Life

Picking up an axe, the furious farm worker crept stealthily to-wards the middle-aged steward of the estate where he was temporarily employed.

He hated the steward. Twice within a few hours the man had reprimanded him for slack-

These rebukes had enraged him so much that he determined to kill the steward at the first opportunity.

His chance came when he found him during the midday break sitting with his 13-yearold daughter, little knowing that a young man with murder in his heart was creeping up behind him. When the young man got within striking distance, glanced round to make sure he was unobserved, then aimed a blow at the steward's head. But exactly at that moment the steward's little daughter lifted up her face for a kiss. Her father bent forward to kiss her - and the axe missed his head by inches.

hour later. There are scores of strange and sensational stories connected with kissing. For example, a Connecticut husband was granted a divorce because his wife had been "cruel" in kissing him after she had been kissing her pet mice! Marie, a beauty born of noble Russian parents, enjoyed kissing and encouraged men who attracted her to kiss her profusely. As she grew to woman-hood, she acquired more and more lovers, but quickly tired

Then she met a young ran who told her, passionately, that her kisses were "like rare wine and much more intoxicating." She eloped with him, only to begin an intrigue shortly afterwards with his brother, who soon ended his own life in despair when he found her failing to respond to his kisses.

Next, unknown to her husband, who had persuaded her to return to him, she bewitched with her kisses a handsome guards officer. A week later she began tiring of him and con-ceived a subtle plan to rid herself of him. A carefully timed note informed her husband where she was dining with this latest lover
