This is Monday morning — blue Monday or white Monday which? Maybe both. Yesterday I had this column written in the rough and for once I hadn't mentioned the weather. There was no need — it had been a lovely day and there was every indication of the ice and flood patches would get away nicely. The roads had been graded and it looked like fair driving conditions for awhile. At five o'clock this morning I looked out of the window and it was still fine. But three hours later . . . wow! Partplanes of my dream. Let's see now, what happen ed earlier in the week. Well, I was trying to figure out most of the time why people talk of a nasal condition as being "just a cold". Because that is what I had - just a cold - the first I've had in about three years. But if I don't get them in quantity and when I get one about all I can do is grin and bear i as I seem to be allergic to both aspirin and penicillin and I never take a chance on trying the many cold remedies that are so freely advertised. So all I do is go from room to room, carrying a box of kleenex along with me. Oh, but for two mornings I did have breakfast in bed. That was really something! I hate meals in bed at any time but it seemed like the easiest way of keeping warm when the outside temperature was hovering around zero. The rest of our household is full of pep, including Taffy and Ditto. They are up to their usual tricks, chasing each other around the house, kicking up the scatter mats and cau confusion generally. I think the person who originally gave loose mats the name of "scatter mats" must have had a few dogs and cats around the place. For the mats can sure scatter all right. HERE'S HOW - Ever wonde how actors can have frosty breaths when playing under not lights of a TV studio- Brit-ish actor John Neville holds a small asbestos cup in which dry ice is placed. Cup is then hidden in folds of scarf, cape or some other garment, somewhere near the face. When actor breathes over the cup, moisture from breath is condensed by the extreme cold in immediate area of dry ice.
