

Saved From Death By Girl's Betrayal

When in Poland recently, I heard the war-time escape story of a very gallant resistance fighter, Dr. Tabeau, a Pole of French extraction.

Like thousands of his then cruelly oppressed countrymen, he was thrown into Auschwitz, the notorious concentration camp, where, by the end of the war, four million men, women and children had been slaughtered.

There he met, among his doomed fellow prisoners, a dark-eyed attractive gipsy girl called Zina.

Any day, any hour, might be her last, but this girl had a vitality and gaiety of heart not to be subdued by the hideous privations, the filthy food, the stinking overcrowded living conditions and the sadistic guards.

She fell wildly in love with the handsome young Pole.

But although attracted to her, he had only one thought in mind—escape.

One day he confided his plan to her. He had worked out a scheme in which he and a comrade, equipped with wire-cutters, intended to cut their way through the electrified barricades, and dash for a hiding place in the forest.

"That's impossible. You must stay here with me, darling," she cried.

"It's no use! I love you, but I must get out of this ghastly camp and tell the world about it," replied the doctor. "It's my duty—other nations must know that I am doing on here."

"No," Zina insisted. "Your place is with me. We must share our fate together. I love you. You're everything to me."

But Dr. Tabeau resisted her pleas.

"All right," said Zina, "I shall stop you, and keep you where you belong, with me!"

True to her threat, she reported her information to the camp boss and Dr. Tabeau, his accomplice and others thought to be the escape plot were seized. They were hustled into a lorry to be driven for interrogation inside the inner compound of the main camp, known as J. Forrest in "Tit-Bits."

Dr. Tabeau knew what savage tortures such an interrogation held for anyone suspected of organizing an escape so he decided to make a break for it on the way. His friend agreed to jump with him. At least they would have the advantage of being outside the camp's main line of barricaded fences.

At a given signal, the two men leapt from the lorry, dashed to the nearest fences and attacked them with wire-cutters they had smuggled out. Bullets spat around them and great sheets of blue flame burst out as they cut through one electrified fence. They tore on and hacked their way through the second fence.

But the Nazi bullets were getting very close. One nicked Dr. Tabeau, though not seriously as, running for their lives, they reached the shelter of the forest. What they had relied on proved true. The guards had not dared to leave the lorry in case the other prisoners also bolted.

Making their way at nightfall, through wooded country, the two Poles hid up by day, sometimes in water, sometimes in trees, while over 4,000 storm-troopers, with tracker dogs searched for them.

Thanks to many strokes of luck, the two men made good their escape. But perhaps Dr. Tabeau's biggest break was the gipsy girl's betrayal.

Had she stuck to his original plan he would have had to run much greater hazards in breaking through more formidable barricades of wire, protected, too, by watchtowers, in which SS guards sat night and day, with their machine guns at the ready.

And had he agreed to her passionate entreaties he would no doubt have shared her fate: death in a gas chamber.

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews.

If you like plain cakes, try this sponge cake that is enlivened with lemon juice and rind.

SPONGE CAKE
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Grated rind of 1 lemon
2 tablespoons water
1 cup sugar
4 eggs, separated
1 cup sifted cake flour
½ teaspoon salt

Add lemon juice, lemon rind and water to sugar. Stir until well mixed. Add unbeaten egg yolks to sugar mixture and beat until fluffy and light. Fold flour into yolk-sugar mixture. Add salt to egg whites and beat until stiff but not dry. Fold whites into flour-yolk mixture. Pour batter into ungreased tube pan at 350 degrees F. until a cake springs back when lightly touched with finger—about 45 minutes. Remove from oven and invert on cake rack. Allow cake to cook entirely before removing from pan—about 1 hour.

MARBLE CAKE
Mix white or yellow batter as directed on box; pour ½ of batter into pans. Melt 1 square unsweetened chocolate (1 oz.) and mix with 2 tablespoons warm water, 1 tablespoon sugar, and ½ teaspoon soda. Pour into remaining batter and beat 30 seconds. Pour over light batter. Cut through batter with knife several times to obtain marbled effect.

CHIP CHOCOLATE CAKE
Make white batter and fold in 2 squares shaved sweet, semi-sweet, or unsweetened chocolate (2 ozs.).

DOUBLE PEPPERMINT CAKE
Make white cake batter and fold in ¼ cup finely crushed peppermint candy. Sprinkle over top of batter a few drops of red food coloring and fold in with only 3 or 4 strokes to streak through batter—but do not blend completely. Frost with white Mountain icing (recipe follows in column) tinted pink. Sprinkle with more crushed peppermint candy.

WHITE MOUNTAIN ICING
Blend well in small saucepan ½ cup sugar, ¼ cup white corn syrup, and 2 tablespoons water. Boil rapidly to 242 degrees F. (Mixture spins a 6-8 inch thread when dropped into cold water.) When mixture begins to boil, start beating ¼ cup egg whites to beaten egg whites, beating constantly until it stands in very stiff peaks. Blend in 1 teaspoon vanilla.

The colour of the egg shell has nothing to do with the quality of an egg—brown or white they're all the same. But here's how you can tell if they're fresh: Old ones are smooth and shiny; fresh eggs are rough and chalky in appearance. Also, a fresh egg sinks in water, the contents should not shake back and forth loosely, the yolk should be in the centre, hold up to the light.

It seems many people waste electricity or gas and cold, via the refrigerator. Make this simple test—close the door of the frig on a slip of paper. If it pulls out easily, have the door strip replaced at once.

Is your bathroom scale telling the truth? Test its accuracy by weighing a 5 or 10-pound bag of flour or sugar on it.

Weighty Thoughts Of De Gaulle

Besides being soldier and statesman, President Charles de Gaulle considers himself a philosopher. From his private desk, his often profound, sometimes sentimental, thoughts have been set forth in his memoirs. Some of De Gaulle's observations:

On France: "The emotional side of me tends to imagine France, like the princess in the fairy stories or the Madonna in the frescoes, as dedicated to an exalted and exceptional destiny... In short, France cannot be France without greatness."

On America: "To what power, to what wealth can America be compared?... (This nation's) economy, based on apparently unlimited resources, (produces) enormous quantities of consumer goods... The United States is assured of being the most prosperous nation for some time. Then, too, it is the strongest!"

On China and Russia: "No doubt Soviet Russia, in spite of having aided communism to take root in China, recognizes that nothing can change the fact that she is Russia, a white nation of Europe... richly endowed with land, mines, factories, and wealth, face to face with the yellow masses of China, numberless and impoverished, indelible and ambitious... casting their eyes about them on the open spaces over which they must one day spread."

On a Third World War: "Who can say that if the opportunity arises, the United States and Russia, while each deciding not to launch its missiles at the main enemy so that it should itself be enemy, will not crush the others? It is possible to imagine that a hushed silence fell over the court."

The defendant looked shamefacedly at the floor. A blush spread over his face. He looked at the judge and said: "Jay walking, your honour."

LAW BREAKER
The judge looked wearily at one of his regular "customers" who had already been before him for speeding, reckless driving, drunken driving, parking, and driving a car with faulty brakes.

"It's you again," grunted the judge. "I seem to remember suspending your driving licence for a year last time. What's the charge now?"

A hushed silence fell over the court.

Nobody Actually Breaks The Bank

The man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo has about as much of a chance in fact as the man in the moon.

The hero of the popular song was a notorious cheat named Charles Wells. It is "rolled and rolled air" it was for twenty-four hours only. By then he was broke. Wells used other people's money for his adventures on the roulette table.

He was arrested in 1893 because he was found with a member of his family, also a baker, as late as 1899.

The shrivelled, blackened face of the first hot cross bun was regarded by the baker as a family heirloom. Why the bun took it from him is a mystery. It was certainly more precious in the baker's eyes than the hundreds of pounds' worth of silver which the thief also took from him.

Nobody seems to know who the first hot cross bun was made. The earliest trace of something like them was in Egypt about 4,000 years ago.

It's still customary for bakers in Devon and Somerset to hang a bun in the rafters on one Good Friday to the next. The belief that it will bring good fortune to house or cottage.

And there's a popular superstition in other parts of Britain that these buns never miller. The famous actor, Edmund Kean, always travelled with a hot cross bun in his luggage as a talisman.

For years he said it brought him good luck, if he hung it up in any house or hotel where he was staying while touring.

But one night a fire broke out in his lodgings despite the presence of the aged bun and was forced to escape in his night shirt leaving the bun to perish in the flames.
