it pays to be a good cook. In fact, it recently paid off hand-somely, in the sum of $25,000 to the winner of the grand bake off in the Pillsbury contest here in Washington.

It may have been merely coneidental that Mrs. Frank H. Schnuelle of Crab Orchard, Neb., is a farmer's wife. Yet, when you come to think of it, it a good old, down-to-earth loaf of bread. It was glamoured up a bit, to be sure, but it was the just the same. And who, after all, should know better than a farmer's wife how to bake

The "breadwinner," they call her now. That figures, too. Asked what she planned to do with her prize money, she replied: "I think I'll put some of it into the farm."

Like most farm wives, she can pitch in and do farm chores if necessary. Milk a cow? "Of course I can milk," she replied as if the question were absurd. Then added: "And I use a onelegged milking stool, too."

This, I learn from the Department of Agriculture, is quite a trick. It means going about it the hard way. A sense of bal-character? Most of the time I was listening to speeches in between canning and pickling; peeling a few onions and then running back to hear more. Strange, isn't it, that we can be so intent on keeping up with our own little chores while the peace of the world is being verbally threatened? You would think making mustard pickle was frightfully important. And so it was, at the moment. That and canning grapes, plums, peaches and pickling beets, straight from the garden. Before I was through the house was reeking with the odor of vinegar and pickling spices. Partner thought I was crazy. "Why don't you give it a rest," he said, "you don't have to get it all done in one week." He also offered to help. Can't I pee the beets or something, he would say. My answer was always the same—"Thanks, the best way you can help is to keep out of my road." Any woman will know what I mean. Slippery beets were hard enough for me to skim, I don't know how Partner expected his stiff, arthritic fingers to handle the job. My goodness, did you ever know the days to draw in so fast? For the life of me I can't see what purpose daylight saving serves at this time of the year. There isn't any daylight to save anyway. We might just as well all be back on standard time and thus save a good deal of confusion. Last week, if you remember, I mentioned Partner having a

Harvest Of Misery In Pennsylvania

The Post-Gazette series on migrant labor brings into dramatic focus the fact that a great and theoretically enlightened state, Pennsylvania, allows thousands of men, women and children to be exploited like beasts of burden.

Frank M. Matthews, Harrisburg Correspondent of the Post-Gazette, has brought out: That between 6,000 and 7,000 Southern Negroes and Puerto Ricans are brought North in rickety vehicles to work on Pen-nsylvania farms from July to October for starvation wages. They "arrive broke and leave broke," Mr. Matthews reports, with the pittances they earn in "stoop-labor" going into the

"company store" operated by the labor recruiter who brings them That it isn't uncommon to see an eight-year-old working in a field, his legs wrapped in gunny sacking or an old inner tube to protect them from thistles. That Pennsylvania has no minimum wage law for agriculture workers, no minimum age

For years, hope lingered that maybe in a remote valley some of the wood bison had escaped hybridization, but none was ever found.

Then in 1957 wildlife officers, taking an aerial census of buf-falo, spotted some animals in the northwestern corner of the Wood Buffalo National Park in northern Alberta. They were 75 miles from the nearest hybrid herd, separated from it by muskeg swamps and lakes that are impassable except in winter. They were big and black; could they be unhybridized wood buf-falo?

Last year a ground expedition crossed the muskeg to find out. Five bison were shot and brought back to Ottawa for stu-dy. Finally, last month, a zoo-logists' report confirmed the home: These were pure-blooded wood buffalo, indeed.

Now, Canadian conservationists have launched a crash program to find the animals a new and isolated range where they could survive and even rebuild their ranks. Once the site has been selected, a wintertime tractor-train expedition will cross the frozen muskeg barrier to bring out young cows and bulls to start new herds. The old herd will be left to continue its fight for racial survival. Not far from the wood buffalo's present range, the whooping crane (world po-

- The "Lost Bison" The wod bison, granddaddy of the familiar plains buffalo, bigger (6 feet high, 12 feet long, 2,300 pounds), blacker, and woollier, once ranged in millions from the Horn Mountains in Canada's subarctic to the Colorado plateaus. But such was the slaughter as civilization moved westward that in the U.S. the wood bison did not live out the nineteenth century; only in Canada did a few hundred, protected by law, struggle into the twentieth century.

The decline of the survivors began in 1906, when Canada, outsmarting a reluctant U.S. Congress, bought the last surviving herd of plains buffalo in the U.S., loaded them into cattle cars, and shipped them 1,200 miles to Wainwright, Alta. Some years later a genetically ignorant Ottawa bureaucrat add-ed the plains bison to the herd of wood bison. The newcomers swamped the wood bison. By 1949, inbreeding had left no known pure-blooded bison atha-vascae rhoads — the zoological name of the woodland species.

In Delaware! Three men were killed about two years ago in an automobiletruck crash near Wilmington, Del. The driver of the car, according to post-mortem tests, was ruled to have been under the influence of alcohol to such an extent as to be liable criminally. A similar ruling was gers and the second passenger was judged to have been under the influence of alcohol, though not perhaps to such a great ex-
