DO-IT-YOURSELF By No Means New

Comes a letter from an old-timer, lamenting the disappearance of hand tools. I do seem to recall many an everyday commonplace of the past has been venerated into the artsy—at least into a craft-art department. People oh and ah over things that aren't really wonderful at all, except that not too many people know how to do things any more. It is too bad, because I take a lot of enjoyment from making and fixing things, and feel special and honored when somebody brings around an odd job he somehow figures out I can do.

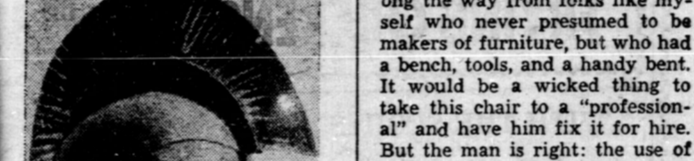

There was once I got repaid all at once. We had put up a new greenhouse that summer, and the boy went to school in the fall to include "manual arts" in his curriculum. The teacher one day came to the subject of setting glass, and each student got a little window sash and a pane of glass, with a dab of putty, and a discourse on the principles. The boy didn't seem to develop full enthusiasm for the subject, and the teacher said to him, "I guess you'll never learn how to set glass." The lad's answer was honest and revealing: he said, "It's hard to get steamed up over this when you've just finished glazing a greenhouse."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Memory Selection: I pray not that thou shouldst take these out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. John 17:15. Repeated prayerful readings of this prayer will convince one that Jesus was asking for something more important than one mammoth organized union of all disciples. The best that oneness involves the disciples of all time (verse 20) is one evidence of this.
