

has been subjected, this past week, to a glare of publicity, due to his alleged inattention to his duties as a Parliamentarian.

Our instant reaction to this charge is that it is completely unfounded. We take this view in consideration of what we consider, to be the superfluous verbiage dished out daily by many of "Reds" cohorts in the House of Commons.

readily agree, we are sure, with our point of view. Quite frankly most of the opposition speeches in the House of Commons remind us of the derelict Sam Morris dishes out week after week in his politically biased journal. Anything to defeat the Government seems to be the policy of the opposition.

Having long been an admirer of the sportsmanship displayed by one of the world's greatest hockey players, it is not surprising to us that he has not joined with his fellow members in these unjustified attacks for the purpose of undermining confidence in the Government.

All of this notwithstanding, we think it is a most ill founded charge to accuse any M.P. of failing to talk enough. Our observations lead us to believe that the M.P. who are seen and seldom heard are the ones who are giving the best direction to our Nation's business.

Our observations lead us to believe that the M.P. who are seen and seldom heard are the ones who are giving the best direction to our Nation's business. So we hope Red keeps on scoring goals in the NHL even though his points total in Parliament may not be among the top ten.
