FARMERS IN THE SLUMS

In the current issue of Maclean's Magazine is an article by people who have a different outlook on life from that of the city dweller. My friend, John Peacock, calls this a "Rural Philosophy of Life". Briefly he proposes to abolish poverty among farmers by having the Government buy up all submarginal farms and re-sell them to what he calls, commercial farmers who would be re-trained (at Government expense) for the larger scale. The disappointed farmers would be re-trained for industrial jobs or, if over 55, he would operate on a much smaller scale. The disappointed farmers would be re-trained (at Government expense) for the larger scale. The disappointed farmers would be re-trained (at Government expense) for the larger scale.

PEACOCK POINT RESTRICTS ANIMALS

A 300-member cottage owners' association from Peacock Point, a village of 150, has petitioned the Walpole Township Council by Robert Phillips, who said, "While Walpole has a wide variety of cottages, many of them are built on Peacock Point, which is a beautiful spot with a view of the water and the surrounding area. The cottages are built on a steep slope and are a danger to the cottage owners. The council should restrict the number of animals on Peacock Point to protect the cottages and the safety of the cottage owners."
