

A mother was telling us, not long ago, that she had to give her daughter (a High School Student) tranquilizers at the end of almost each school day in order to calm her fears. If this were an isolated case it could be passed off with the conclusion the girl could have been too well protected parentally in the earlier years of her life and is now unable to adjust to the regimentation of school life. We've come to the conclusion it is not an isolated case and, if we are correct, something should be done about it.

We well remember our own school experience and it is a pretty terrible one to review. We remember being frightened by the first days in a village school after attending a country school. We had the usual initiation of being beaten up by several town kids before coming to the realization that hands are also meant to be used in other ways when the occasion demands. We still do not believe there is any justification for a child to go through that experience. We recall some very kindly teachers who seemed dedicated to their tasks. We liked them and assimilated everything they told us. Unfortunately this relationship did not last. We eventually came to teachers that demonstrated the least possible knowledge of human relationships and seemed to regard their pupils as something to be tolerated rather than taught.

It seems to us there comes a time in the life of every individual when he or she will demand to be treated with respect.

pect We admit that every student is different and if knowledge is to be assimilated then every student must be treated with understanding. While we appreciate the very difficult task of those engaged in the teaching profession we deny they have any right to permit frustration in their association with any student. We also think that any teacher worthy of being called such, should recognize the mental problems of any student, that finds tranquilizers a necessary part of gaining knowledge, and be prepared by counselling to eliminate the obstruction to a serene and peaceful attitude of mind toward his or her school and teachers.

It was not long ago too that another parent related to us that he had to take his child to a Doctor. The diagnosis was a nervous condition arising from a fear of teachers. Some may say the blame is improperly directed, but is it? The teaching profession has come a long way toward the recognition they should deserve. This perhaps, would not have been possible except for the supply-demand situation in the village since the Second Great War. Many laymen are asking themselves if the teachers, while gaining a new status in our society, have been equally concerned with the high standards of instruction that the students of this day and every other day deserve as they start out in life.

There are some accidents that cannot be guarded against by even the most careful driver. The Ontario Safety League reports that in December, George M. Armstrong of Perogon drove home at midday, had lunch then re-entered his car and pressed the starter. There was a tremendous rattle under the hood and steam shot out in all directions. A large white cat had apparently climbed on to the engine, gone to sleep and then become caught in the belt when the engine started. The cat was smashed into the radiator, with fatal results to both.

It is better to give than to lend, and it costs about the same.

SCORECARD FOR BOSSES This Week

The Golden Rule, it has been said, should be the first rule for bosses as for other men, and it is no doubt true that the good boss will not go very far wrong if he treats his subordinates as he would wish them to treat him if he were in their shoes. He will surely be more likely to earn and deserve their respect and trust. Although translating this into specific ground rules governing day-to-day administration isn't particularly easy, one executive at least has attempted it and come up with the following 21 ways to be a better boss, as interesting perhaps to all who have a boss as to the boss himself:

- (1) Know your subordinates, know what is important to each one, and motivate him accordingly;
- (2) Set high standards in your own behaviour;
- (3) Be considerate, calm and courteous;
- (4) Be consistent; let your people know what they can expect of you;
- (5) Emphasize skill, not rule; let others use their own methods when possible;
- (6) Listen thoughtfully, objectively, when someone talks;
- (7) Give people goals to work for;
- (8) Give orders in terms of suggestions to requests;
- (9) Delegate responsibility for details to subordinates;
- (10) Show confidence in your staff; let them see you expect them to do their best;
- (11) Keep them informed; let them know when changes are in the offering;
- (12) Let them in on your plans at an early stage;
- (13) Ask for their counsel; solicit their ideas; a courteous, thoughtful hearing;
- (14) Give them a chance to take part in your decisions;
- (15) Give them a chance to take part in your decisions;
- (16) Tell the originator of an idea what action was taken and why;
- (17) Let people implement their own ideas, where possible;
- (18) Build up your subordinates' sense of the value of their job;
- (19) Tell them where they stand, good or bad;
- (20) Criticize or approve in private; praise in public;
- (21) Pass credit for well-done down to the person who earned it.

And how do you score, boss? If you think the world owes you a living, buckle out and collect it. — more leisure time in future they must be taught to use it constructively, the association said in a brief to the Ontario Legislature's select committee on youth.

The recommendation was one of 35 contained in the final report of a study of 400 Ontario communities. It said that hobbies, social and cultural skills and a wide variety of sports and games should be part of each child's basic education.
