are thrown up by vehicles on the highway.

Another argument is that cars with studs will stop more efficiently, thereby causing rear end collisions. This seems a foolish statement when one considers the wide acceptance of air brakes and disc brakes, both of which give much better stopping power than the conventional drum breaking systems of many cars

The question of additional cost is often raised. This cost varies according to the size of tire and weight of the vehicle, but with body shops charging $5 to $6 an hour, you can buy tire and weight of the vehicle, but with body shops charging $5 to $6 an hour, you can but a lot of studs for the cost of a slight accident.

The argument that studs mark the pavement on fast stops and starts seems to be a valid one. Yet the New York State highway authorities have just reported that their tests show that even if $50\% of all vehicles on their highways the vehicles on the vehicles on the vehicles of the vehicles of the vehicles of the vehicles on their highways the vehicles of the vehic $5 to $6 an hour, you can buy ed and studs are fired in with
