WOMEN AS RULERS

The sudden death of Prime Minister Shastri of India removed from the world scene one of the greatest national leaders of our time. Born in respectable poverty, he rose to become head of the second largest nation in the world, often called "The sub-continent". It was an insignificant, jolly looking little man, but he had the qualities of leadership. India has been independent only for 18 years and is still in a state of confusion. He was a man of great vision and energy, and the question as to who shall succeed him is of vital importance, not only to India but to the whole world. Under these circumstances, we are naturally interested to know that person will be who will succeed him. It is a matter of great interest to us, who shall succeed him. It is a matter of great interest to us, who shall succeed him. It is a matter of great interest to us, who shall succeed him.
