The other day I picked up the telephone and called Batman's agent in New York After the usual exchange of names and "how are you's", the conversation went something like this: "I'm calling to find like this: "I'm calling to find out if Batman makes personal appearances." The answer was "yes". "What's the fee?" The answer was $20,000, plus expenses. "How long would the personal appearance last?" "That's for one day", was the answer.

He's not only asking for twenty thousand, but he's getting it. His agent informed me that he is booked into a stadium in New York City and his will also receive a percentage of the gross as well as the 20 grand

As the man said, "You can't blame him for making it while he can." When the show dies so will Batman's fee.

Probably the Toronto columnaist was being humorous when he said people have cocktails at 6 P.M. He can't be serious. In a city with over one million population (it's almost two million) I doubt if you could find 2,000 households sipping cocktails nightly between 6 and 7 P.M.

I reside in an area with a pepulation of over 100,000 people and I'm certain that it would be difficult to find 100 households indulging every evening titive relationship of crops.

Bell does something about it

Quietly— perhaps too quietly— we've been assembling one of Canada's finest teams of scientists and engineers in our Northern Electric Laboratories in Ottawa. (Northern Electric, as you know, is Bell's manufacturing subsidiary.)

They have already produced new communications equipment that leads the world: advanced telephone/intercom sets for business; the world's smallest fully automatic dial exchange; improved microwave systems; and other items for which there was a specific Canadian need. Now you can see how we not only keep our talent in Canada, but actually attract bright minds from all over the world:
