Some people are dubious about the high school driver instruction reduces accident expectation substantially. The Ontario Safety League would like to draw their attention to a recent large scale survey in Illinois which showed that teenagers who have studied driver education are involved in only half as many accidents, and convicted of only one third as many violations as those who have not taken the course.

Using an electronic data processing system, the Secretary of State presented the records of 516,776 of the state's licensed drivers, aged 16-20. Of these 176,892 had studied driver education.

This group showed a rate of 171 moving-vehicle convictions per 1,000 drivers, as compared with a rate of 408 convictions for the non-driver-education group. Driver-education students were involved in accidents at a rate of 26 per 1,000, while the others had an accident rate of 111 per 1,000.
