The Assistant Dean of the Engineering Department of Toronto University said...

This "negative" statement followed a fifty-minute halt in subway transportation in Toronto on Monday afternoon...

It is possible that any citizens of this country who can endorse this sort of action?

We wonder how seriously the people of Toronto, who own the subway line, will take the loss, in dollars, arising from this sort of mischief...

We wonder how annoying it will be to people who have only recently accepted another increase in taxes to fund the facilities deemed necessary to educate university students...

The Ontario government medical insurance plan, which will cover about 1,800 low-income people, now is law and goes into effect in March.

Toronto papers became very excited last week about the return of form declarations by a majority of Ontario doctors...

The O.M.A. speedily disbanded the newspapers of this importance, and the Ontario medical association's executive is expected to co-operate with the Ontario plan as it now stands.

The most important points of the pledges have any possibility of doctors contracting with the government for medical care insurance...

Dr. Matthew Dymond, provincial health minister, said he requested the O.M.A. to contract with the government for medical coverage but was turned down because the association declined legal authority...

Dymond said that, if this was the case, as an O.M.A. member he had been "living in a fool's paradise for 29 years."

He also said that the mass mailing for permits for its membership was not a good idea.

SCHOOLS SHUN MIGRANTS A report of a citizen's committee in Toronto said last week that children encourage anti-immigrant attitudes...
