Last week we left off at Idaho Falls, Idaho, and headed for the Jackson Hole in the State of Wyoming. While on another occasion, we had visited Jackson, Wyoming, before we had approached the place from the North and had gone southward from that point toward Salt Lake City. Now, at Idaho Falls, Idaho, we found ourselves west of Jackson and had to drive about one hundred and fifty miles eastward to arrive there. Well now, let us tell you, withouta word of lie, that we doubt if many people could stand the journey. The road takes the traveller up to an elevation of 8,500 feet and for the last twenty miles, coming in to Jackson, we drop to the bottom by a series of twists and turns that can only be accomplished in low gear and with a foot hard on the brake. Doing this in anything less than a Buick or Wildcat would be quite beyond our capacity to withstand!

Nevertheless we are glad to have made the trip all in one piece and to spend an hour or so in Jackson Hole is an experience anyone should aspire to. There is no place that can give one the sensation of experiencing the old west quite like Jackson. The building that was the first bank charter for the Wells Fargo Co., back in 1878, still stands there, as it was then. There are board sidewalks in the town and the enterprising merchants display merchandise that would phase Fifth Avenue in New York. A visitor also sees the odd wrangler who has come in from the palins and is living it up. They are, undoubtedly, tough hombres and we gave them lots of room on the sidewalk as they weaved out of the saloons.

Leaving Jackson we headed for Flaggs Tourist Resort at the south entrance to Yellowstone Park. From Jackson to Yellowstone we thoroughly enjoyed the scenery. This is, without doubt, the most beautiful part of the United States. At Flagg's we hear the travellers from the north telling about the heavy snowfall in Yellowstone and the difficulty of travel. On the 15th of September we couldn't believe it. However, on arriving at the Park entrance a big sign told us that travel through the park was not recommended. Being with a fearless group, a majority vote dicieded we would proceed. The snowfall was heavy, at least eight inches, the conditions on the highway were fearful, the travelling was treacherous, we had many thrills.....but what is life without thrills and we finally made the ninety five miles through the Park.

During this period of travel we had a deer stick its head in the window of the car. We saw at least fifty elk, a moose, and several bear. In addition we stopped to see "Old Faithful" give off with her pressure and inspect the fabulous log hotel located opposite to this Geyser. The weather, however, was not such as to produce the most effective viewing of the spouting of "Old Faithful" that has been going on regularly since discovered by man nearly one hundred years ago. The hot springs are still exciting the tourists but having seen them before our only reaction was to wonder what in the world will eventually happen with all that force below the earth.

Tomorrow we expect to view the rolling hills of Montana and, maybe, the Bad Lands of South Dakota. We're running slightly behind schedule but, nevertheless, we expect this will not be necessarily disturbing to anyone else but ourselves—and that is not important. The three sons are still compatible and the son-in-law is doing his best to keep in tune. See you next week.

Under Wide Skies

- By Rosemary Hill -

Recently, a columnist on one of the big, daily newspapers made a remark about teenagers to which I feel I must take exception. His title, "Some Good Kids", referred to the fact that, in his opinion, the children not yet in their teens are sane and normal. This is fine and good, but where does it leave those of us who are neither children, nor legally of age. I gather it leaves us somewhere beyond the pale along with the Red Chinese, the Nazis and the Sons of Freedom Doukhobors.

His sole criticism, however, was that we are addicted to "long hair and sad songs". To this, I can only reply that these seem to be more commendable addictions than swallowing LSD, or leering up little old ladies, or dropping bombs on people who don't agree with our ideology.

Long hair, after all, is only a matter of fashion—one that has made its appearance off and on, down the centuries. I fail to see that it signals the beginnings of moral disintegration or the onrush of anarchy.

The gentleman claims that our songs are sad. I disagree. True, they are not gay and lighthearted; but we are not living in a lighthearted age, and the teens are not a gay time of life. We are confused and we are groping to find ourselves. Our songs merely reflect this soul-searching. I wonder how many of this man's generation still care enough to probe earnestly for what is true and good and right.

The gentleman has not hurt us by his indictment. He has only succeeded in showing himself for what he is—a man who has forgotten what it is like to be young and is a little frightened of those who have not.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

(intended for last issue):

R. R. 1, Jarvis, Ontario
November: 11, 1966

As one of the many Canadians of Dutch origin of this area I feel a need to express myself on the occasion of Remembrance Day.

It has been more than twenty-one years now that we, in Holland, were suffering so intensely during the final months of the Second World War. How vividly I remember it! In my mind I can still picture many scenes as if they happened yesterday. Our hope, our despair, our fear, our lack of food, fuel, electricity and so many of the elementary things of life. Hiding ourselves, and part of our belongings, literally underground for weeks or months on end. And then, after a four-day fight in and around our hometown (Groningen), on that bright April day, the almost unbelievable (after so many years) rumor: Our liberators, the Canadians, are here! And there they came, first stealthily around corners, guns atthe ready, climbing every possible look-out point—and later on the tanks, with jubilant soldiers and citizens! We welcomed them into our homes, and they generously handed out chocolates, cigarettes, white (imagine what that was (or us!) bread— Soon our new Canadian friends were singing with us at the organ "The Maple Leaf Forever" but also well-known English Hymns. What a tie was created in those days, when our liberators and we were one in the celebration of our new-found and so dearly treasured liberty. A tie that was to remain for many, many years to come. Every evening on the fourth of May there are still church services, and parades to War Monuments and military cemeteries in the Netherlands to remember those who fought for our freedom, but did not live to see and celebrate and tell about it. So many thousands of Canadians who gave their lives for us.—And the many others who did survive, but risked their lives nonetheless.

It is no wonder that, when Holland recuperated from the war effects, and the number of inhabitants outgrew the small country, thousands of people from The Netherlands decided to emigrate to Canada, the country where so many of their daughters went to as warbrides, the country of which they had heard so much from its sons, who had come to liberate us.

Now most of us are Canadian citizens too. And we are proud of it! Many of us came here too old to loose our native characteristics, but then, it can only enrich Canadian life and culture if we preserve at least some of our heritage. But to this day we are grateful to God, and to our Canadian friends and neighbours, for the freedom that is ours again.

SUBDIVISION CONTROL, WALPOLE NOMINATION

- By W. C. Edsall -

It appears that the subdivision issue will create much interest in the nomination of November 28th and the election of December 5th. Since the council announced intention to put the bylaw on the whole township it concerns all about everybody. The land owners right to sell, the buyers right to buy without restrictive regulations as to lot sizes, and uses of the land are particularly if it is so we have no voice in it. Then it is a democratic state the people concerned have a right to know in advance that once this bylaw is in effect neither we or our council have the power to alter or repeal it without the consent of the minister of municipal affairs. This puts it into the hands of one man who is outside of our municipality. How is that for centralization of power?

The Encyclopedias describe totalitarianism as a highly centralized form of Government which admits of no political opposition and seeks to regulate all aspects of the citizen's life.

While we have control of our own rights and interstes we ought to know enough to keep it that way. In countries where freedom has been lost even a blood bath has failed to gain their freedom. While we are not making any accusations against anyone we do have a right to check on our public servants and to know what is being done and what cannot be undone. When a store manager checks the cash register he is not accusing the employees of dishonesty but he simply has a right to know. We also have a right to know what goes on, and before it is locked up so we cannot change it, not after.

If the land owners through this township want some control it should be through a local planing board where the people concerned can have a voice. There probably should be a Walpole land owners association to make recommendations to council. If the council takes on a dictatorial attitude we can elect a new council. We have little or no control over centralized power outside of our municipality. Let's hold what we have, while the voters are still in the drivers' seat.

Remember the nomination and election dates.
