Windows and Doors Cemented Shut

Port Dover mausoleum, that won for Port Dover and Woodhouse township so much adverse publicity last summer as it was used as a hang-out for the many transient work mostly from Quebec, who were awaiting the opening of the flue-cured tobacco harvest, is now being sealed up with concrete blocks, on the orders of the Port Dover Cemetery Board. The work of sealing up all the entrances into the building is being carried out by Arthur Leitch.

Dubbed "death hotel" by the small army of transients who literally took the place over, it proved a bugbear to the neighbors and was a real headache to the officials of the Cemetery Co., and actually resulted in a real gang war downtown that Port Dover will not soon forget. The transients slept in the "crypts" of the mausoleum, while using the cemetery facilities for their wash-ups, laundering, etc.

The Cemetery Board would like nothing better than to put up the building torn down, but apparently nobody wants to put up the high cost of finding out who actually owns it and who's responsibility it would be to order it razed. It was built by A.C. Stewart & Co.

Nanticoke Personals

Mr and Mrs. Cecil Hedges spent the weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Vokes of Port Rowan. Mr. and Mrs. James Lindsay, and Mr. and Mrs. Neil Clark of London visited Mrs. Violet Hogg in Hamburg, Michigan, for the week-end. High Moisture Corn Good Bet For Farmer

By J.J. Hagarty Soils and Crops Specialist Crop Science Department University of Guelph

Your main crop is oats. Someone comes along pointing to another grain crop that will produce three times as much feed per acre. This crop can be mechanized to eliminate backwork and there is no need to dry the grain. Are you interested? Of course. The crop is corn, stored as high moisture grain in a silo.

High moisture corn has definite advantages for the livestock farmer. If he has to dry corn, there will be an annual cost of 10 to 15c per bushel just for drying. This is a big cost, when we realize that in most high moisture corn systems, it would pay for a new silo, unloader and processing unit.

Why grow grain at all? Forages, especially corn silage, provide a lower cost source of nutrients. This is enough to feed 40 cows, at the equivalent daily rate of 15 pounds of dry shelled corn. If ground shelled corn is stored, it means feeding 1,020 pounds of high moisture corn (equal to 880 pounds of dry shelled corn). This is enough to feed 175 hogs at a rate of 5 pounds of dry shelled corn per day. Where livestock numbers are too low to obtain the required removal rate other choices might be (1) sealed silo, (2) homemade sealed tank, (3) crib.

With any choice the whole system must be considered. No one system is best for everyone.
