

World Leaders Left Guessing About Asian Situation

By Stephen Scott

The world leaders were left guessing about the Southeast Asian situation as the mercurial Prince Norodom Sihanouk was ousted by a right-wing coup in Cambodia and North Vietnamese troops advanced southward in Laos.

Sihanouk had governed Cambodia for 20 years and had preserved his small country's neutrality with a balancing act during which he frequently swung from anti-communism to anti-Americanism.

He was ousted as he was visiting Moscow in an attempt to get the Soviet Union to help in expelling North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops who are using Cambodia as a sanctuary in the South Vietnam war. He later went to Peking.

Members of the National Assembly accused Sihanouk of everything from nepotism to corruption. But it was evident a main reason for his ousting was the impatience of the new right-wing leadership with the prince's failure to get rid of Communists.

The new strongmen are Premier Lon Nol, also head of Cambodia's ill-organized 30,000-man army, and Deputy Premier Sirik Matak. Reports from the capital of Phnom Penh said the country was calm, with the government suspending constitutional rights for six months and claiming broad support from the people.

What happens next? The United States was hoping that a new pro-Western government would allow South Vietnamese and American troops to chase their enemy into Cambodian soil. They saw the possibility of supplies for the North Vietnamese fighting in the South being cut.

Other reports said that it is doubtful that Communist China and Hanoi will sit still while a new government moves Cambodia to the right. And it was doubtful that the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong would consider leaving Cambodia. Across the Cambodian border in Laos troops from Thailand joined troops supporting the government of Prince Savannah Phouma in trying to halt a southward drive by North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao.

Communist-led troops captured the Plain of Jars of Laos recently. They obviously were protecting the Ho Chi Minh Trail that snakes from North Vietnam through Laos and Cambodia. But what else they had in mind was uncertain.

Britain asked all parties to the 1962 Geneva conference, including Canada, to exercise all possible influence to improve the situation in Laos.

Meanwhile the South Vietnamese war was heating up a bit. For only the second week this year American battle deaths exceeded 100.

And in a startling development in the case of the murder of more than 100 South Vietnamese at My Lai, the U.S. charged 14 officers with suppressing news of the two-year-old massacre. They include Maj.-Gen. Samuel W. Koster, head of the famous West Point military academy who was commander of a division at the time.

And still another Southeast Asian incident, two men forced an American munitions ship bound for Thailand to put into Cambodia.

The men, anti-war protesters Clyde W. McKay, 25, and Alvin L. Glakowski, 30, got half the crew to abandon the ship American Eagle with a bomb scare, then took over. Cambodia granted them asylum. The U.S. was negotiating for the ship's release.

Skyjacking, meanwhile, took a grim turn when a man identified as John J. Divivo attempted to make an Eastern Airlines flight from Newark, N.J., to Boston to "fly east."

In a scuffle in the cockpit co-pilot James E. Hartley was killed. Divivo and pilot

Robert Wilber, 35, were wounded. Wilber, wounded in both arms, managed to land the plane which had 68 persons on board.

The governing council of the 115-country International Civil Aircraft Organization, meeting in Montreal, decided to call an extra-ordinary meeting of all members for June to discuss what should be done to protect persons using civil aircraft.

In the Middle East concern was expressed over two reports. One was that U.S. President Nixon has decided for the time being not to give any more aircraft. The other was that new Soviet missiles, with the troops to man them, had been landed in Egypt.

The United Nations Security Council tightened the screws a little bit more on rebel Rhodesia, calling on all countries to break relations, trade and surface transportation with the new republic.

Earlier the United States and Britain joined in vetoing and Afro-Asian resolution that condemned Britain for not using force to overthrow the regime of Ian Smith. It was the first veto cast by the U.S. in the 25-year history of the UN.

West German Chancellor Willy Brandt and East German President Willi Stoph held a historic meeting in East Germany. Brandt received a tumultuous welcome from the people. Indian Prime Minister Gandhi's government took over the government of West Bengal state after Marxist-led riots.

Caretaker Premier Mariano Rumor accepted a request to try to form a new government of Italy, in the midst of the worst of 30 political crises since 1944. Sino-Soviet border discussions are reported in Moscow in trouble over Chinese claims of Russian plans for aggression.

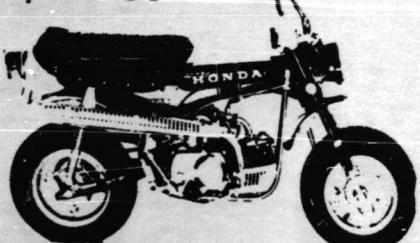

Expo '70 got off to a shaky start, with weather holding attendance well below the first days of Montreal's Expo 67. A spreading U.S. postal strike hit New York and other centres. It was expected to cost business millions.

A delicious lunch was served by Mrs. W. Irwin, Mrs. G. Hoover, Christine Moss and the hostess.

On The Farm Front

As spring seeding approaches the reminder goes out that quality of seed, seed treating and amount of fertilizer or plant food is no place to cut costs. These farm inputs

There may be an opportunity to shop for price on some inputs but quality of seed cannot be sacrificed. Seed treating has always been good insurance. And applying the right kind and amount of fertilizer according to soil test has been proven many times to be the most economical.

April 15 is the closing date for entries in the High Yield Winter Wheat Competition. This competition has been introduced this year by the Haldimand Soil and Crop Improvement Association along with its 150 Bushel Corn Competition and High Yield Barley Competition.

A yield competition in soybeans will also be held. While entry dates for the other competitions will be later in the season those who take part will want to make note now so that plans can be made accordingly.

For the wheat crop there is still an opportunity to influence yield by ensuring that the spring nitrogen application is made and that weed control is arranged.

The committee structure is taking shape and more people are becoming involved as the weeks pass. By the fall of 1971 the general committee wants everyone in the county to have a place in the promotion and carrying out of this large event.

One activity that all can take part in is the Farm and Home Improvement Competition. Announcement of the competition details can be expected in the near future.
