Tire Mixing

The Canada Safety Council warns motorists of the danger of mixing different types of automobile tires. This affects snow tires which many motorists are buying as the winter driving season approaches.

The danger of intermixing has increased sharply because of the large number of different new tire types and sizes.

The tires should not be mixed because they differ greatly in performance when supporting similar loads, in their side slippage and even in braking. Because of these differences, the vehicle's handling characteristics may be seriously affected by intermixing the tires.

Tests show the most common effect of intermixing tires is a fishtailing, weaving condition.

The Canada Safety Council advises motorists to follow the recommendations in Owners' Manual or reputable tire dealers. Tires should be mounted on the rear for better traction and handling and should be broken in by limiting speed to 60 mph for the first miles.

For the highest degree of safety, fit all four wheels with the same type of tire—bias, belted-bias or radial ply. This applies to snow tires — if your tires are bias, fit bias tires on the rear wheels.

It is exceptionally dangerous to intermix belted-bias or radial ply wheels on the same axle. It is similarly dangerous to intermix tires of the new "60 series" tires should not be applied to any vehicle unless approved by the vehicle manufacturer.
