Safe Trailering To The Snow

For most of us, snowmobiling requires that we frequently trailer our machines from where we live to more suitable operating locales, just to get to more or better snow of for special events such as rallies. Because of this high frequency of trailering, the concerned recreation experts at Mercury snowmobiles have called attention to the fact that safe trailering is just as important as safe machine operation on the snow. According to their observations, safety actually begins with trailer selection, in three important aspects. 1. The swivel-tilt type is safer (and easier) to load than the tilt-only type, and worth its small extra cost. 2. A "bargain" trailer is likely to have "bargain" wheel bearings. And if bearings fail and you loose an axle at highway speeds, the result could be a badly damaged trailer and snowmobile! 3. Be certain there are sufficient tie-down hooks. Then, actual trailering requires observance of special cautions... 4. Pack those wheel bearings at least once a year. 5. Keep tires properly inflated. 6. Have a proper hitch for your car installed - not the unsupported bumper clamp type. 7. Load your snowmobile(s) onto the trailer so the weight is largely forward - if too much weight is too far back, there will be a tendency to whiplash. 8. Pump, never lock, your
