Snowmobiling Ralph Plaisted

Smow mobilers have found that what is fun doing alone is even more enjoyable in a group so they have organized clubs to add a new dimension to the booming winter fun sport.

Well-organized clubs often purchase an old house or barn on open land and develop a rustic, comfortable clubhouse. A system of trails is developed on the land, giving club members a private snowmobile area.

In addition to serving as social centers for snowmobilers, clubs perform valuable service. Many offer summer storage arrangements for members, an important maintenance consideration for any snow machine owner.

Clubs also have been instrumental in winter. rescues involving lost hunters, plane crash victims, stranded motorists, and others caught in snow

Clubs police their own nembers on matters of human safety and environmental protection. As one Midwest club member put it, "Most snowmobiler are courteous, safe, sensible people, but careless, insensitive indivduals can spoil the sport for all. One purpose of our club is to seek safe. correct use of snowmobiles for everyone."

For better snowmobiling, join you local snowmobile club. Or if there is none in your area, why not get some fellow snowmobilers and
