Foster Family 'Plays Rules By Ear'

KENTY'S CORNER, Ont. (CP) — What are foster homes all about? Ask Mr. and Mrs. George Leck, of this tiny Northern Ontario community near Timmins.

They have five foster children — three of them teenagers — and they know the score.

"We treat them as our own — whether they've got our name or not," says Mr. Leck, who talks beamingly about his almost-instant family.

Mr. and Mrs. Leck, who are in their late 20s, bought a farm here in June, 1969. Mrs. Leck had grown up on a farm, and Mr. Leck had worked on them "For as long as I can remember."

Last July, when Mr. and Mrs. Leck moved into their big farmhouse, there were only three in the family. At that time, they had one foster daughter. They have had no children of their own.

Mr. Leck had worked for five years as a social worker, two of them in Timmins. The need for foster homes for teenagers prompted him and his wife to open their hearts and their house to the teenagers. They had wanted to do so before, but their small Timmins bungalow did not allow such plans.

Both hold bachelor of arts degrees from McMaster University. Mrs. Leck is an English teacher at Timmins high and vocational school.

Four days after they moved into the farmhouse, the number of their foster children had risen to five: two boys, 11 and 12, and three teenagers — two girls, 15 and 16, and a 17-year-old boy.

Mr. Leck had known three of the children as he had been their social worker.

Asked if he and Mrs. Leck had prepared a definite set of rules for the youngsters to follow, Mr. Leck replied, with a twinkle in his eye:

"We have a set of rules which we play by ear."

He feels discipline and conduct seem often to be a battleground for some foster parents. Some foster children are afraid and resentful because they believe that if they do anything contrary to hard and fast rules, they will be transferred or returned to the receiving home until further arrangements can be made.

"I know we'd never turn ours out — that's out of the question. I never thought they did anything bad enough to be kicked out, and even so, there have been some fairly trying situations. I think you have to be tolerant."

A far as any disciplinary problems are concerned, Mr. Leck said: "If there's anything abnormal about our family, it's that everyone gets along too well. They have their fights, and make pretty snarky remarks to each other at times, but I think any parent would be proud to have these kids."

It's a full-time job running a farm, and the Lecks say they could not get along without the co-operation of the children, though some of them had never been on a farm before, nor seen a cow.

Now that the oldest boy has finished school and is working full-time on the farm, things are a little less hectic. The two youngest boys used to get up every morning at 6:30 to help milk the cows before school, and when told that this was no longer necessary they felt almost left out for a while.

"Our kids are really good, that way," said Mr. Leck. "They aren't really our own, and they don't owe us anything, but they really pull their load around the farm."

His face breaks into a warm smile as he recalls the time "our kids" all chipped in, bought them a card and gave them money "to have dinner out." If was Mr. and Mrs. Leck's fourth wedding anniversary.

Mr. Leck summed it all up: "We want the children to know this is their home. They've given us a great deal. It's enriched our married life an awful lot."

$$$ And Good Sense

By William J. Martin

Dear Mr. Martin: From time to time in your column you have referred to a "rainy day" fund. Exactly what is a "rainy day" fund; how much should you have in it and under what circumstances do you spend the money you have in this fund? Isn't it the same as a savings account? Mrs. S. A.

A good way of defining the difference between a "rainy day" fund and a savings account is a savings account is good to have when you are faced with unexpected expenses such as medical bills, car repair bills, etc. It is also nice to have around when your family has a want or need for which you haven't budgeted — a color television set, a family vacation, etc. In addition, it is also used as a repository for money that will be applied to a specific use at some point in the future — a college fund for the kids, for example. It may be set up for a number of reasons or for no specific reason at all — just for the future. On the other hand, there is only one purpose for a "rainy day" fund and that is to provide a temporary source of income should the one real emergency come, when the breadwinner's income is cut off.

Therefore, you should never spend money from your "rainy day" fund for anything but that one big emergency. As for how much should be in the "rainy day" fund we would recommend that it contain an amount equal to what the breadwinner would bring home in two months. In other words, your "rainy day" fund should permit you to continue living at your same standard of living for two months. In that length, the breadwinner most often will be able to get himself started again and the flow of income moving again. If not, the problem becomes one that must be treated individually and not in general terms.

New Books At Library

Are you tired of meal planning? We have a variety of good cook books and meal planning pamphlets. Have you read "The Joy of Cooking" by Irma S. Rombauer. It is a joy for cooking and a joy for reading. Have you been brave enough to try a Fondue? There is a book here on Fondue and Chafing dish cooking, by Margaret Deeds Murphy. We are getting the Mail-a-menu-sheets from the Ontario Food Council. These have a menu — quite practical — plus the recipes. We also get the Consumer Bulletin from "Box 99." We have two books on quantity cooking.

Some of new novels are: A Baker's Dozen, Maugham; The Green Man, Amis; Michel, Michel, Lewis; The Poseidon Adventure.

There are always new books in the Children's section as my little friends know.
