The Cayuga Past Grands Lodge, entertained the Hagersville Past Grands at a dinner, April 27, in the Oddfellows Hall Cayuga. Guests of honor were: Sarah Laidlaw, President of Ontario Past Grands Lodges, and Shirley Mitchell, District Deputy. April 30, the procedure was reversed, the Hagersville Branch entertained the Cayuga Club, at a dinner in the Hagersville Lodge.

Just a word in passing, concerning the Stanley Cup play-offs on Tuesday night, April 28 in the St. Louis Arena when the temperature was over 90 degrees. This observer speaking as a "Hockey Buff", for as long as there has been Hockey in this Country, would like to know why those games can't be run off, before the warm weather sets in? The fans were sitting in the stands, fanning themselves and looking very wilted by the extreme heat. What about the players on the ice, padded up, and crash helmets on?

We all know Hockey should be played outside, and in the right temperature. Barring that, could we not press the management for more consideration for those noble lads, who have made it to the top in the National Hockey league, and given people like me so much enjoyment over the years.

If they receive enough protest letters, they will do something to expiate the situation.

During 1960-68 the Canadian pulp and paper industry spent $55,000,000 on water pollution control.

Specialy Written For The Record By Sterling Taylor Canadian Press Staff Writer

After years of criticism, government at all levels appears to have decided that it was wrong and all sports endeavor should be developed along the lines of hockey.

John Munro, federal minister of health and welfare, hasn't admitted it openly, but he has said so, nevertheless, in his "proposed sports policy for Canadians."

First, Munro's policy deals with the lack of facilities and financial assistance for youngsters from poor families.

"Poorer children often don't have the facilities or the motivation to participate while middle class children may have the facilities but are lacking in motivation", he said March 20.

Too bad no one told Charlie Conacher he would never be one of the all-time greats of the National Hockey League because his family couldn't afford to buy him skates.

Conacher learned to play on the streets of Toronto, however, and his shot, developed by using a rubber ball instead of a puck, was one of the most feared in professional hockey.

Now, Munro plans to create a broad base of athletics by creating facilities and finances for mass participation in every sport.

This is the same broad base that has made hockey the leading sport in this country for 50 years.

Munro hopes to create from this broad base a climbing pyramid, which will peter out as lesser athletes fail to make the next plateau until only the elite corps is found at the top.

This is precisely what has been happening all along in hockey.

The trouble with Munro's policy is that he hasn't yet thought up an incentive for youngsters to shoot at, while hockey has always had the NHL.

It is strange that for years, politicians berated the NHL, claiming it was dealing in slave trade, cramping a child's intellectual progress by placing a great emphasis on winning and reaching the big time.

Now it appears Munro is advocating the same thing. The minister got neatly around this, however, in his March 20 speech by pointing out that the "will to win" should be de-emphasized.

Munro claimed it is probably all right to play to win at the highly professional level, but this should not be the case at the various plateaus of his pyramid.

The only thing this contention showed was that the whole idea of the pyramid is being defeated before it gets started.

If there is no incentive to win, there is also nothing for a youngster or an oldster for that matter to aim at. Champions are not created by simply playing. They are created because they have a greater will to win combined with the ability to do so.

Take away the glory and the prestige of winning, and the system falls apart.

The incentive for every boy in Canada is to reach the NHL and that's precisely why this country turns out the greatest players.

Cleaning Pots and Pans

If your pots and pans are badly stained, home economists at Macdonald Institute, University of Guelph, suggest a spring cleaning treatment. Stubborn stains on cooking utensils can usually be removed using the following methods:

Aluminum: To remove dark stains, boil a solution of 2 tablespoons cream of tartar in 1 quart water in the pot for about 10 minutes. Scour with steel wool soap pad to restore shine. Avoid abrasives on colored aluminum.

Stainless Steel: To remove heat marks, scour with a small amount of household cleanser. If the marks are severe, the pan may need buffing by the manufacturer.

Enamelware: Soak a solution of three tablespoons of chlorine bleach to one quart warm water in the pan for about five minutes.

Porcelain-enamelled Cast Iron: Gently boil a solution of detergent and water for about 20 minutes in the pan; scrape the sides with a wooden spoon.

Cast Iron: To prevent rusting, season the pan. To do this, spread melted shortening or salad oil on the inside of the utensil. Place in a warm oven or over low heat for several hours, coating sides occasionally with more fat. When cool, wipe off excess fat with paper towels.

When washing, do not soak in a detergent as this removes the seasoning. Dry the pan thoroughly by heating over slow heat for about five minutes.
