

Lamb's Corners Models

The fourth meeting of the Lamb's Corners 4-H Club was held on October 19, 1970 at the home of Mrs. Hare.

The meeting was opened with the singing of O Canada and the repeating of the 4-H Pledge. The secretary gave her report and the roll call.

The name of the club was decided as the Lamb's Corners Models.

Mrs. Hare demonstrated how to do darts, staystitching, gathers and seams.

Our record books were checked by Mrs. Sheppard to see if they were complete and up-to-date.

We closed with The Queen.

The fifth meeting of the Lamb's Corners 4-H Club was held on October 24, 1970 at the home of Mrs. Hare.

The meeting was opened with the singing of O Canada and the repeating of the 4-H Pledge.

We then had the secretary's report and the roll call.

We made plans for our party which will take place when the club finishes meeting.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Sheppard on October 31, 1970 at 9:30 a.m.

Mrs. Hare demonstrated sleeves and facings. Our record books were checked by Mrs. Sheppard to see if they were complete and up-to-date.

We closed with The Queen.

On Hallowe'en, about 3/4 million Canadian children will be collecting pennies in their UNICEF boxes to help other children in the developing countries.

Editorial Comment

Good Effort By C of C

Hagersville's Chamber of Commerce should be commended for organizing one of the biggest undertakings ever made by the village merchants in many years.

Participation in the event is almost 100 percent, which shows that businessmen in competition with each other can make a collective effort.

This is good and the Record wishes the merchants every success in their "Early Bird Parade of Values."

"Courage and Restraint"

The editor of "Saturday Night" magazine has written a challenging article that should make us think. He begins by saying that the politicians who are courageous enough to challenge "even the most basic beliefs of the Canadian people" will not get elected, but they will greatly influence our thinking and our lives.

He specifies three things that we all assume are good and right and says they are bad and wrong. These are: Large Families, Cars and Highways. We must wage a campaign against large families because we just do not have room for them all. In making this assertion he is not very radical, others are saying the same thing. But what about cars? These must be drastically reduced because they are destroying the atmosphere. To this I would add that the amount of space they require in the streets and in parking lots. Something will have to be done about it soon. Another reason against too great a use of cars is the rush hour period. In the morning people arrive at work frustrated and nervous and in the evening get home exhausted.

His attitude to highways is somewhat more radical and I think I had better quote him. "Building roads and expressways is in many ways a socially harmful practice. It's a disease. Cut it out. The freedom of the open road is a curse, a blight on our civilization." He gives no reason for this statement, but surely we have all felt sad when some beauty spot or fruitful farming area is plowed to make way for another new highway. Canada is slowly letting itself get buried under a mass of asphalt, cement and steel, and we will have to do something about it soon before we are crushed under it. The onus is the public ownership of land.

He goes on to remind us that the earth is not the property of any one nation or people. It is the property of all. The empires of Egypt and Assyria today? And that technology cannot save us, "not atomic power, not space travel. Nothing will help. Nothing will work but restraint." Restraint means denial, self denial. It means stopping before we get too far involved, it means putting ourselves to some inconvenience, it means giving up something we wanted. I have often wondered where we are going with our technology, our waste of natural resources, our pollution. I do not agree with all that Robert Fulford says but he does give us something to think about. Where is our Age of Affluence going to lead us? Shall we need another Depression to teach us restraint?

The Editor,

Dear Sir:

In undertaking the colossal task of compiling the Edmund Pugsley family story from 1833 to present, I have found a series of Edmund Pugsley Memories, written by Norman C. Colbert in 1952.

These are numbered parts 2, 3, 4, 5. Part one is missing. These were passed to may by my cousin Walter Lamb who was then a subscriber and living here in Vancouver. He died two years ago.

This Edmund Pugsley was a cousin of my father, Edmund Sylvester, but I never met him, or knew much about him except that he at one time was said to have carried the gold-headed cane for his brilliant educational accomplishments.

I would think that the missing part I of this Colbert series would have some explanatory vital facts about the Edmund Pugsley concerned. And I am wondering if there would be any record on file in the Jarvis Record office of that part. What I am most concerned about is which one of the early branches of the 1833 Edmund emigrants this Jarvis Edmund sprang from.

If you could help me in any way, or give me a lead to someone who might help me, I'd be glad to compensate for any expenses incurred. Thanking you very much for a reply at your leisure, I am
Sincerely
Edmund (E) Pugsley.

Dear Sir:

We would like to express our appreciation for the publicity we received on the walkathon held to raise funds for the Canadian Christian School of Jarvis. However in your report you called this school the Christian Reformed School, which is incorrect. We would appreciate it if in future publications you would use the correct name. Thank you on behalf of the board.

Your truly,
