Dollars And Good Sense

by William J. Martin
Most of you have probably heard about government housing assistance for lower income groups — but what about you? You with a family income between $7,000 and $12,000. What with the way the economy has been recently, you probably need as much help as anyone.

It was with this thought in mind that the U.S. Congress passed a little-publicized law that established the Housing Opportunity Allowance Program under the administration of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. For those who qualify (mainly by the income category above) a $20 a month subsidy on mortgage payments is available for up to five years.

The maximum loan to be eligible is $25,000, but the problem is in finding a lender. Of the nearly 5,000 savings and loan associations in the U.S., only about 3,000 are eligible to participate, and only about 1,000 actually do.

There is also a problem in establishing true need and the decision to approve the loan is up to the individual lender. Only about 1,000 loans have been made under the program since it was established in April. The lack of public awareness is one limiting factor, of course, and the local interpretation of need is another.

The program is described as an experiment and of the $250 million originally authorized by Congress, only some $85 million has been appropriated and only about $1 million has actually been committed. If you qualify in income and loan amount, I've just taken care of your problems. Now you're aware of the program. Now all you need to do is find a lender participating in the program and establish a need.

TORIAL COMMENT

Time For Giving

Right now, collectors for charity are sharpening their teeth and their strategy for the annual campaign on behalf of united community funds, community chests, theatre appeals or whatever they are called in different centres across Canada.

And soon the critics will be heard with their blarney that this is an outmoded way of dealing with social problems.

The idea of such an annual appeal is to make a campaign cover the needs of a dozen or more organizations serving people in trouble.

An army of volunteers will be turned loose among housewives for some of their household instructions will be car washes by students and other young people in business and industrial personnel.

In some communities volunteers have lined up what is called a "fair share" chart showing what the "more generous" and the "most generous" in the various brackets might donate.

Some critics say the work done by organizations supported by community funds, such as that among aged children and by family-service and neighborhood associations, might better be carried out by government.

They point to the fact that in Canada united community funds collect about $50 million a year while levels of government spend $10 billion yearly on social welfare.

But the fund raisers contend that such campaigns do save tax money. They figure that $12 million in tax is equal to $18 million in government funds by the time you count volunteer effort.

Fund officials think of voluntarism as a safeguard against government. They argue that governments are often uncaring and inefficient. They say that government never provides social service until the public screams for it, and what is more important, will vote for a candidate who promises it.

But no matter who looks after the problems, fund raisers say that with current depressed economic conditions, needs for social services have become more acute. And agencies say that yearly increases in budgets have greatly increased the need for donations.

30 YEARS AGO

While it was originally intended to open the new office at the first of the month circumstances due to the arrival of the equipment altered the original plans. It is understood now that the opening will be on or before September 1st at the latest.

Citizens have been talking with interest the development of the new office station on the north corner of Main and Front Streets for the past several weeks. Each day brought a change in the general scene but until yesterday there still seemed to be something familiar about the corner. Now nothing but the memory of the old scene remains. The row of chestnut trees on Talbot Street have been uprooted and taken away.

Hagersville, Aug. 8 — Delegates of all municipalities concerned, with the exception of Cayuga, gathered with members of the West Haldimand District High School Board in Hagersville last night to discuss future high school accommodation. While a decision was not reached, the delegates appeared unanimous in the wish that the school board first decide a definite course and submit it to County Council for final approval or rejection.

Law Questioned

EDMONTON (CP) — If a teacher makes several copies of an article and gives them to his students, is he breaking the law?

This question, part of a complex copyright issue, was discussed by delegates at the Canadian Educational Communications conference.

"When I first became involved with educational media, I thought I could forget about copyrighting," said Derwyn Davies, director of the Seven Oaks school division in Manitoba.

"However, I soon found out differently."

Mr. Davies, a member of the panel, said the copyright and education and the issue is certainly not clearly defined.

"I doubt that it would be an offence infringing on the copyright laws to write a single copy of a poem on a blackboard."

"But it may be another question when a teacher makes copies of that poem so that students don't have to buy the book."

Mr. Davies commented that it would probably be all right if the copying is done "within the teacher's own resources."

However, once technical devices such as copying machines and video-tape units are used, there might have to be some controls.

There might well be a difference between copying and duplicating, with the former term dealing with only one copy and the latter referring to several copies. Thus copying likely would be legally acceptable but duplicating may violate copyright law.

Availability of the material in question was the major cause of copyright problems. "If the material is not available from any other source, what can one do?" Dr. Marsh Jeanneret of the University of Toronto

Press expressed ethical concern for the creator of the material which is copied.

"We know buildings are not free, we know school equipment is not free.

"Therefore it can reasonably be asked why authors should be free."

Rich Men Better Drivers

Burlington, Ont. — Rich men make better drivers than poor men.

Maybe. But there is growing evidence according to the people who make expensive Jaguar sports cars.

Says the Public Service Division of British Leyland Motors Canada Ltd. from a study done by Professor F. A. Whitlock, a psychologist at Queensland University, the man with little property, no bank account, no basic responsibilities — in effect a man with nothing to lose — may be more liable to cause an accident, even death on the highway.

The Professor says he has evidence which shows that such a man is more likely to regard other road users as a threat to the amount of road his car occupies or possesses.

On top of this he believes there is a strong link between a high proportion of people occupying rented accommodation and high rates of road deaths.

People who own expensive cars — such as Jaguar — invariably have a home, cottage, family and some money in the bank. In other words they have something to lose.

The Professor also, in his special study "Death of the Road", shatters the car as a sex symbol. He says the car may attract women not directly because it embellishes the male driver's allure with its exciting shape and speed, but because the car and the road it occupies is a piece of territory. Women want men who can take and hold territory, he says.

After surveying the United States, Britain and 25 other countries, the Professor is now studying the links between rates of road deaths, and of homicide and suicide.

And while he is working on it he wants drivers to be more considerate, give way to other drivers, and to politely wave their thanks while they are giving way "to appease aggression."

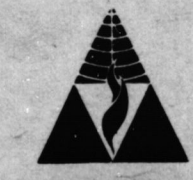

URGENTLY NEEDED

TORONTO (CP) — Canadians have donated more than $582,000 for relief for Pakistani refugees but more cash is urgently needed, a UNICEF official said. Paul Ignatieff, executive-director of Canadian UNICEF and vice-chairman of the Combined appeal for Pakistani relief, recently returned from an extended visit to refugee camps in India. He said the shelter and food situation is reaching crisis proportions.

Federal Grant For Marihuana Research

Ottawa — A $ 9,680 grant for research into the non-medical use of drugs has been awarded Dr. G. M. Ling, Department of Pharmacology, University of Ottawa. The announcement was made by Jean-T. Richard, M.P. for Ottawa East, on behalf of National Health and Welfare Minister John Munro.

The grant will be used for studies of the effects of cannabis (marihuana) on complex intellectual functioning in humans.

Research on the non-medical use of drugs is part of the co-ordinated federal program on drug abuse announced this year by Mr. Munro. Other components are an expansion of services for the analysis of drugs, a national information program and the development of new methods of handling drug-created problems. Dr. Aurele Beaulnes is co-ordinator of the program.

Application forms for research projects may be obtained from the Medical Research Council or the Health Grants Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The federal program also includes a wide range of welfare and rehabilitative services with help being provided by the Canada Assistance Plan.
