On Sunday June 13 at 3 p.m. the Decoration Day Service was held at Riverside Cemetery, under the auspices of Canadian Legion Branch No. 159. The parade formed at the Legion Hall on Talbot Road.

Cheapside UCW

The UCW of Cheapside United Church met at the Wilson McDonald Museum on Thursday June 17 for a picnic dinner at 12:30 p.m. with an attendance of 11 members, five visitors and three children.

The UCW will be responsible for the church service on July 18 in the absence of Mr. Creaser who is away at Pinehill College taking a course.

There will not be a UCW meeting in July.

After a number of interesting games and contests we went into the museum and viewed new additions to the museum.

Everyone enjoyed the program and the beautiful sunshine of the day.

cemetery for the ceremony. Padre Pryse was chairman.

Musical selections were given by the Cayuga Secondary School Band with Miss J. Veale directing.

The distribution of flowers took place during the band numbers. Welcome and appreciation was extended by the Legion President.

The Rev. Fr. J. A. Sweeney gave a stirring address in his usual capable manner. He drew our minds back over the years. We were reminded of the two world wars and the Korean war as well. He quoted from Rupert Brooke's poem, The Soldier.

The honor roll was read by Comrade Allan Stitt, two minutes silence followed by the Last Post and Reveille. The hymn "Abide With Me" was sung. The Benediction was given by Padre Pryse.

"God Save the Queen" was then sung. The parade then marched back to the Legion Hall and disbanded.

In wandering through the cemetery after the service we noted some of the tomb stones had been there since the 1830s.

Aerosol Containers Can Be Dangerous

Aerosol spray cans contain products ranging from hair spray to paint.

But this modern convenience can also be dangerous, says farm safety specialist Hal Wright.

The first and most important step is to read the label before pushing the button. All products have specific warning labels and instructions printed on the can.

Heat can have a disastrous effect on a can and its contents. Therefore, says Mr. Wright, never incinerate or burn the can; the result could be an explosion. For the same reason, the can should never be left in direct sunlight, or close to a heat source such as a stove, radiator or furnace.

Never puncture the container. The pressurized contents could explode, causing injury or death.

When using flammable or toxic liquids, make sure there is adequate ventilation. Never spray near an open flame.

Never spray near the eyes. If a product such as hair spray does get into eyes wash them with plenty of water. Never inhale an aerosol spray. Remember, hair spray combined with a lit cigarette can create a human torch.

Finally, says Mr. Wright, always keep aerosols out of the reach of children.

Churches Closing

TORONTO (CP) — Traditional churches that are on the brink of closing are in trouble because they're not faithful to the gospel, says Rev. Marney Patterson, the only itinerant evangelist in the Anglican Church in Canada.

"Take me to a church — an historical church — where the gospel is really proclaimed and I'll show you a successful church," he says. "It's out of that climate that people are called to the ministry."

A former salesman and radio announcer, Mr. Patterson was an Anglican priest from 1956 to 1967, when he felt the call and founded Invitation to Live Crusades, Inc.

He calls his style soft-sell, but "you have to use every conceivable means to attract the people we want."

"We live in a competitive world, and we'll do anything but stand on our heads to get an audience."

Mr. Patterson says a major problem facing established churches is the snowmobile, which this year cut into church attendance as badly in the winter as do cottages in the summer.

"You have to think things out to cope with this — the business man copes or goes out of business."

One way of coping, if you're a minister facing a smaller congregation each Sunday, is to call in an evangelist to renew the faithful and awaken the non-believers.

Mr. Patterson won't come into an area unless he is invited by groups of pastors in the area. "There's no soliciting," he says.

With no financial support from the Anglican Church as such, Mr. Patterson and his office staff of five must depend in part on a single collection taken during each crusade.

Invitation to Live

Crusades, Inc., a non-profit organization, has a board of directors made up of 11 business and professional men.

Mild-mannered soft-spoken, Mr. Patterson is far from the flamboyant fire-and-brimstone preacher many people associate with the evangelist.

"I'm a soft-sell but not a reflection on who take a different approach," he says. "I don't find it necessary to be hard-sell."

"I don't work people emotionally—that's the job of God, not my responsibility. My task is to declare the message."

"There are some rollers we used to call — I've seen who could do services I wouldn't believe if I hadn't seen them. But if it does good, God blesses it."

Places Workers

TORONTO (CP) — Volunteer Action for social change, a church-sponsored — group that places workers in community projects during the summer, may have done more to help the volunteers than the projects.

Gordon MacLean, 25, national co-ordinator for the organization, says it has sometimes fallen short of its goals, but changes in the structure of the five-year-old organization should bring volunteers closer to their projects.

The major change is the establishment of regional offices instead of one national office. Mr. MacLean hopes this will enable some volunteers to keep working on their projects part-time after the summer ends.

The avowed purpose of the organization is to make individuals aware of the decisions are made in society and to help bring about a more equal distribution of wealth and power in Canadian society.

The organization grew out of plans by a number of Canadian denominations in the early 1960's for an ecumenical youth assembly in 1967.

As plans progressed, it was decided that young people would benefit more than an experimental community action projects than from a one-shot meeting.

Volunteers across Canada help set up a drop-in centres and recreational facilities for young people and Indians, many of them working with existing citizen groups.

Volunteers are told that, even when their projects fail, the experience more than compensates for their lack of results.

Sometimes projects fail because volunteers fail to win community acceptance, Mr. MacLean says. The most successful programs were those where volunteers worked along with members of existing citizens' groups.

University student Isaac Marmorstein, 19 helped establish a drop-in centre in the local school at the Scattered Indian reserve in Manitoba, but saw it close when the local board of education needed the converted schoolhouse.

He agrees that work on a summer project may have more long-term value to the volunteer than to the "places they go to work for."

Bone Graft Aids Denture Wearers

For you denture wearers who are constantly nagged by loose-fitting plates, help appears to be on the way.

A new bone grafting technique carried out by oral surgeons has been used successfully on 10 patients whose continuing jawbone deterioration prevented a good fit of lower dentures.

A temporary metal implant lined with a filter membrane is grafted to the bone which has been receding. This gives the support needed to keep dentures snugly in place.

The filter permits tissue liquids to pass through, but stops scar tissue from entering the grafted area where it could interfere with the marrow and bone regeneration.

The metal implant is screwed into the lower jawbone and covered by layers of soft tissue. It is removed some 8 to 10 weeks after surgery and dentures are fitted immediately. In all cases, the bone grew to the height and contour of the implant and provided solid and comfortable support to the dentures.

The patients are undergoing long-term examinations to see if the natural bone will again recede. But so far, the results have been most encouraging. — Canadian Dental Association.
