Hard Look At Soap And Soft Water

Homemakers on both sides of the border have been taking a hard look at softened water and old fashioned soap for the laundry as a foil for phosphate pollution from this source.

According to George M. Freeman, President of Culligan of Canada Ltd., manufacturers of water conditioning equipment, "it's phenomenal." Request for information and services poured in as a pollution-conscious homemakers explore the merits of soap and softened water for their washing.

In the U.S., Dr. Mary E. Purchase, Associate Professor, New York State College of Human Ecology, Cornell University, recently told the Water Conditioning Association International: "Interest in soap began to increase a year or so ago" along with housewives' growing concern about phosphates and their environmental effects. Discussing the soap-detergent-soap water-hard water issue, Dr. Purchase said, "Soap cleans when used in soft water - and for best results the water must be soft when it comes from the tap."

Hardness in water is measured in grains to the gallon, and problems with soap arise when the hardness is more than 3 grains. The culprits, calcium and magnesium salts, combine chemically with soap to form an insoluble curd easily visible in the ring around the bathtub.

The same question has been raised in this country.

NO ANSWER

TORONTO (CP) -

Students on the television program Under Attack are "scornful and arrogant at times," Dr. G. Andrew Lawson told the Timothy Eaton Memorial Church congregation of Toronto recently. He said there are also arrogant politicians, church leaders and professionals and labelled this a "cover-up for stupidity. Nobody has all the answers and those who are looking for the perfect answer, the perfect political party, the perfect church, had better leave this planet. Anyone who claims he has all the answers is a dunce."

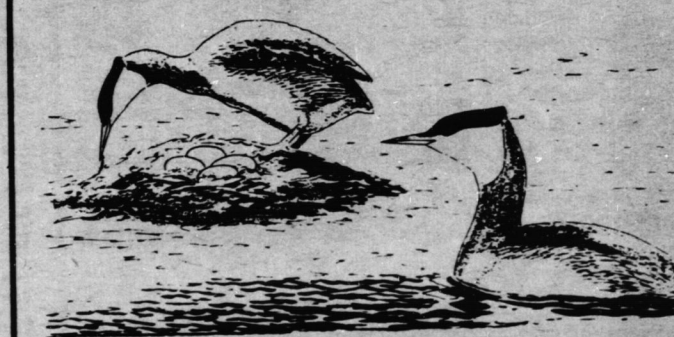

Dr. Purchase noted the advantages of the home water softening installation (ion exchange) over the additive types of softener (washing soda and the polyphosphates). Among more technically explained merits, she said that the ion exchange softens water to zero to 1 grain per gallon, permitting total efficiency of the soap and preventing formation of soap curd; it can also remove small amounts of iron and filter out some turbidity. This is done before the water comes from the tap, automatically treating both wash and rinse waters.

MARSH WORLD

RED-NECKED GREBE

This grebe prefers the borders of freshwater lakes and marshes where stands of bulrush are found. It is distinguished by its black crown, white cheeks and rusty-red neck. Like all grebes its legs are so far back that it has difficulty walking and waddles awkwardly onto the eggs, after jumping onto the nest from the water. Nest - a wet floating platform of marsh debris, anchored to reeds, occasionally on a muskrat house. It feeds on small fish, crustaceans and aquatic insects.
