Tuberculosis Battle Said Not Over Yet

While the drugs streptomycin, PAS, Isoniazid and, more recently, Rifampin were expected to herald the end of Tuberculosis in Canada, it has not in fact been the case. In 1970, 527 Canadians died of TB, there were 3,943 new active cases last year, 622 re-activated cases and a total of 9,610 people under treatment for tuberculosis.

Drugs, however, have revolutionized the treatment of tuberculosis. The length of time TB patients must stay in sanatoria has been reduced from two years or more to a matter of a few weeks, and in some cases, there has been no admission at all as patients are treated on an out-patient basis for one to two years. In some provinces, Ontario in particular, sanatorium treatment is no longer considered necessary as treatment is started in a general hospital and continued at an out-patient chest clinic.

But there are problems. Particular groups such as senior citizens and underprivileged persons are more prone to contracting TB. Canada's Indians have ten times the number of cases of TB than non-Indians, and Eskimo's have a TB rate 40 times that of the general population.

In the developing world, TB is the greatest scourge and often the number one killer. The World Health Organization estimates there are 15 million active cases and three million TB deaths annually.

The Christmas Seal Organization has come a long way in its battle against tuberculosis. It was founded by concerned citizens in 1898 seeking to control the frightening and fatal disease, consumption. The Organization first concerned itself with setting up sanatoria and influencing the government to accept responsibility for the care of TB patients.

By 1920, health departments in most parts of Canada were co-operating with TB associations in establishing TB programs, with Christmas Seal Funds employed to expand that partnership and spearhead new programs in diagnosis, treatment and prevention of tuberculosis, and research.

Christmas Seal Associations across Canada pioneered mass x-ray surveys and have run these for nearly 30 years. While mass surveys are still being used in most provinces, they are primarily concerned with more remote areas, and particular groups.

For a charge of $5 for each sample, you receive analysis results and a feed recommendation.
Feed analysis works, says Mr. Jackson, and it enables a dairy farmer to maintain his herd's production level. Compared to the losses that might occur by using poor quality feeds, the cost is negligible.
