McKeough To Speak

Darcy McKeough's visit to Haldimand County to address the full joint study committee on Thursday comes at a most opportune time. Nigel Richardson, director of the Haldimand Norfolk Study, has just completed a series of nine meetings this month to explain to the public his interim report on the restructuring of local municipal government.

Mr. Richardson's report has caused considerable controversy in the two counties because of its suggestions that radically change the long accepted system of municipal government each municipality electing a council of a reeve, deputy-reeve and three councillors.

What Mr. Richardson is suggesting is three alternatives, which he urged each and every one to read carefully before making any further suggestions.

These suggestions propose a one-tier type of regional government which would eliminate all existing municipalities; a two-tier regional governing body and thirdly, a unitary system of regional government, which would define three or four areas of similar influence, such as a central area influenced by the Nanticoke development, an eastern region, a western region and a northern region.

The proposals reject the present system as being inadequate to handle even present day demands, let alone demands that will be placed on municipalities in the immediate future of this area.

The councils in the two counties have been told repeatedly the area is scheduled to become one of the fastest growing areas in North America and will need a strong regional-type government to cope with the problems few can even begin to realize.

However, change does not occur easily. Especially not change that will revolutionize a life-style that has dominated the area for a

Thus it becomes important for those who are closest to the situation to understand it fully and to pass on this information to the public of their municipalities.

And it is doubly important that the province keep the councillors and members of the study committee fully informed and well versed in what is going on. Mr. McKeough's visit to the area can do nothing but good at this particular time when all members of the study need official direction from the one man whose job is to carry out the government's stated policy of restructuring the municipal governments of

Wise, Unwise and Otherwise

By The Old Owl

Who among us has a real sense of responsibility? Some seem to have it, others seem not to have it. But let us take a brief look at the animal world first. Some animals seem to to have this sense as far as the mother and the young ones are concerned - the male procures their food and stays by to protect them, but I understand there are some species that do not

Among the animals that live with man. the dog alone seems to have this sense towards its human friends. The cat and the horse do not seem to have it, although I have read of cats who woke up the family when the house was

I do know of one peculiar instance of a tom cat with a sense of responsibility. He lived in a house on the edge of a bush and one day did not show up for his food. After a time he came back bringing his wife and family with him. He, at any rate, seems to have had this sense of responsibility as far as his family was concerned.

But let us turn to the human side. Here, among intelligent beings, we find quite a difference, some seem to have a strong sense of responsibility others have very little of such

The motorist who drives at 60 or 70 miles an hour on an icy road does not appear to realize he is responsible not only for himself and his passengers but also for the driver and passengers of any car he may run into. There are also some husbands who have so little sense of responsibility that they leave home and just disappear instead of trying to help bring up the family he helped to bring into the world.

The same thing applies to teenagers. The fact they are able to attend high school is due to the efforts made by the parents and school authorities and so on. The student has a responsibility to his parents and the others to do his or her best for their sake if not his

Our local Board of Trade has provided containers for trash all along Main Street, many people use them, others do not. Such people do not seem to realize that they have a responsibility to keep our streets clean and free

So one might go on with many other examples, we can think others up in our own mids. The important thing is that one of the differences between us and the animals is that we are intelligent beings with a strong sense of responsibility, which we ought to cultivate.
