In 1967, when the Canadian National Institute for the Blind Amateur Radio Club was formed, there were 42 licensed ham operators. Today there are 150. Special classes are held each year for the blind in CNIB offices in co-operation with the more than 100 amateur radio clubs in Canada. Sighted hams act as instructors and sponsors who assemble, modify and install equipment in the homes of blind hams who pass their government tests.
