territory: two cents for customer-dialed; five cents for operator-handled station - to station; and 10 cents for person-to-person.

The 1974 proposed increase is one cent on each overtime minute for all long distance calls.

General increases proposed for 1973 include five cents a month for residence and hotel extensions and 1.5 per cent -- with a five cent minimum -- for most other services.

Pay phone rates for local calls, which haven't changed in 20 years, would double to 20 cents over a 15-month conversion period, beginning in 1974.

New vandal-proof phones with a dial-tone-first feature would be provided. This would permit a caller to reach an operator in an emergency without depositing money.

The proposed 25-cent charge for calls to directory assistance would not apply to handicapped persons such as the blind. Nor would the charge be levied on calls from pay phones, or hospital or hotel rooms.

General increases proposed for 1974 -- in addition to basic rate boosts -- include an additional five cents a month for residence and hotel extensions, and 6.25 per cent for most other services.

As part of its application to the CTC, Bell is asking approval of a five-year plan -- to go into effect in 1974 -- to make four-party service the new standard in the rural areas.

As many as 10 customers share a line in some rural areas today. Multi-party service would not be offered to new customers in these areas. Increases in 1974 for residence customers, which would range from 95 cents to $1.65 a month, would depend on the number of telephones in the exchange's local calling area.

Under this plan, only single and two-party service would be available in build-up areas of an exchange outside the main urban centre. Commuted mileage charges would be eliminated.
