Her shirt was enhanced with flowered appliques accented by a wide ruffle at the hemline extending in a soft train. Her gown was designed and made by the bride's mother.

To complete her outfit, she chose a picture hat with pink velvet streamers to match her bolero.

She carried a nosegay of multi-colored flowers.

Janice Phibbs, of Waterloo, a friend of the bride, was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Judy Doughty of Vancouver, cousin of the bride, Wendy Laurie of Mississauga and Mrs. Cathy Whitford of Jarvis, friends of the bride.

They wore green floral gowns complimented by moss green velvet boleros, and carried baskets of yellow daisies and sprays of wheat with green velvet streamers.

Doug Gedy, of Mississauga, friend of the groom, acted as best man. Ushers were Bruce Whitford, friend of the groom, George Miller, brother of the bride, and Paul Harrop, brother of the groom.

Receiving the guests the bride's mother wore a street-length dress of peach pompadour with matching corsage while the groom's mother wore a street-length dress of turquoise chiffon over polyester crepe and wore a corsage of yellow roses.

Don Leatherdale and the Clubmen played for a dance reception during the evening.

For a honeymoon to the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania, the bride wore a floor-length, hot pink jumper with a white sheer blouse styled on Victorian lines. She wore a corsage of gardenias.
