Editorial Comment:

Conflict Of Interest

Ontario's Premier William Davis last week set out a number of guidelines with respect to conflict of interest, to which present and future ministers of the cabinet will have to adhere.

While the guidelines are not unduly harsh, they do impose some hardship on the ministers, but will likely result in members of the cabinet having greater credibility with the public than at present.

Cabinet members will now have to make disclosures of all land owned in Ontario, except property for their own private residential or recreational use; all share or debt interests in private companies and land and all partnerships or proprietorships in which they are principals.

No private company in which a minister has interest may become contractually involved with the province.

It will now become a minister's responsibility to step out of the ministry if some matter involving personal beneficial interest comes before his ministry.

Ministers will also have to abstain from day to day participation in any business or professional activity.

Ministers with share interests in public corporations will be required either to get rid of these holdings or place them in the hands of a trustee.

These guidelines do not apply to private members of the legislature, but the chairman of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature has been requested to examine the question.

While the whole question of conflict of interest is a thorny one, action at the top provincial level may well filter down to the municipal level, albeit in somewhat altered form. Rural municipal councillors could hardly divest themselves of their livelihood while they were in office.

But with regional government looming for Haldimand - Norfolk it might be considered good form for prospective councillors to declare their holdings, when the time comes.

A TRAVEL JOURNAL (6)

Hedgerows - That was one thing I hoped to see again. A hedgerow is a long narrow mound on top of which grow a collection of bushes. It is used to divide one field from another, and from the road, which we accomplish with wire fences. By its very nature a hedge lasts a long time, over several generations or more, which means that the shape of the field does not change over the years.

The bushes grow and the hedge next to the road grows to a height of several feet higher than the roof of the car (especially on the narrow country roads). Consequently the passenger in the car gets very little opportunity to see the country he is passing through. It is like driving through a green tunnel. It is still more difficult for the driver but the ones I rode with drove with consummate skill.

Europe, of course, is divided into many nations, some quite small (as is Belgium), others larger, but all of them small compared with our countries on this continent. On the other hand they have large populations, and each one of them is not only independent, but fiercely so. They have their own government, currency, education systems and "culture" and, of course, their own financial system.

I suppose that the various nations have developed from tribal origins. Sometimes, as in Britain, two or more tribes combined to form what subsequently became a nation. However, we must remember that the present system of individual nations is really a 19th century development. Previous to that the various states consisted of the area that each petty king or duke could bring under his rule. But, in the 19th century various nationalities emerged.

In view of this background and the drug scare, I expected that my passport would be carefully checked and my luggage gone over very thoroughly. Somewhat to my surprise this did not happen. No custom officer even so much as asked me to open my suitcase and they all gave a very perfunctory glance at my passport. One official offered to stamp my passport "to show you have been her."

Except for the passport, crossing from Belgium into Britain was just like going from Ontario to Manitoba. I wonder if the Common Market, or NATO is the reason for this attitude?

Counter Clockwise

20 Years Ago,
Thursday, Sept. 11, 1952

Saturday, Sept. 13 has been set as the date for the annual Haldimand Junior Farmer Plowing Match. Juniors from all over the county will once again test their skill with fellow competitors for who can plow the straightest furrow.

Ten classes are being offered, four for horse plowing and six for tractor competition.

The first meeting of the Haldimand Historical Society for the winter season was held Monday evening, Sept. 8 at the Court House, Cayuga.

The roll call was answered by an interesting display of old goblets. A donation of a collection of antiques was gratefully received from Wilson Brooks collection of Dunnville, also an official survey chain used by Edmund Decew, when surveying the Township of Walpole in the early 1800s.

Through the kindness of Kobi Kobayashi, of the Port Dover Lions Club, the Jarvis Lions were privileged to view two reels of travel pictures on Japan at the regular meeting of Club on Monday night.

Lion Kobi arranged for the showing of the pictures through the Japanese Embassy at Ottawa. The pictures were taken by the Japanese Travel Bureau and proved extremely interesting to the local Lions.

The biggest man hunt in Ontario's history was spurred by the escape of four members of the Boyd bank robbery gang from Toronto's Don Jail on Monday morning.

Citizens of Ontario were shocked at the getaway of Edwin Boyd, William Jackson, Steve Suchan and Leonard Jackson. Boyd and William Jackson were facing several bank robbery charges. Suchan and Leonard Jackson - no relation to William - were charged with the murder of a Toronto detective Edmund Tong last spring. The latter two had been caught several weeks ago in Montreal after fierce gunfights there.
