History Of Hagersville

This article was chosen by the editor of the Jarvis Record for reprint. It was reprinted from the New York Tribune in the 1890's.

EXTREME LOW NECKS ON YOUNG LADIES ARE NOT APPROVED

The dancing dress of today is a thing of gauze and other sheer materials. Glimmer of satin and sheen of silk are for the time veiled by materials like filmy gauzes of Indian weave, "floating air" and "woven mist," but made in the land of France and called by the less poetic name of chiffonnes. A few dresses for married ladies are made of brocades, lisses and tulles, or the spangled gauze, which look as if they might have belonged to the wardrobe of an Oriental princess, are made up into graceful dancing gowns called "Josephine dresses" with simple, straight full skirts of gauze over satin and low square necked bodices, which might have been modeled after the familiar portraits of the beautiful empress.

The severe style of this dress, with its high sash of soft surah is considered especially suitable for a debutante, though in such a case the square neck is veiled with lace.

There is a decided objection among mothers to the adoption of the extreme décolleté styles worn by the older women of society, by girls in their first or second season. In many cases the evening bodice for young girls is merely pointed and filled in with lace, while the sleeve is entirely omitted or is an elbow sleeve. Other dresses for young ladies are draped with figured net or gauze and caught up with rosettes and garlands of ribbons in the flat effect now universally seen. Dainty point d'esprit, dotted in the most delicate manner embroidered lisses wrought with tiny rosebuds or some fine blossoms in pale green, delicate rose, or yellow over satin make beautiful dresses.

I was surprised to find an article as sophisticated as this in a local paper, but I am sure that the women of the 1890's lapped it up, and built dream wardrobes on articles like this one.

On The Farm Front

Fall fertilizer is more common this year. Good weather and field conditions have helped to make application possible. Uncertainty about price and the supply of fertilizer next spring have helped many to decide on fall application.

More soil samples have been tested to date this fall than is usual for this time of year. Orders for fertilizer are likely to be placed earlier than is normal. Because conditions have been ideal, the amount of agricultural limestone applied this fall will likely be increased.

Interest in systemic insecticides for control of the warble fly and grubs was quite high at the recent meeting of Haldimand Beef Improvement Association. Members of the association would like to invite all county cattle-men to join them in control of the insect by using the pour-on sprays such as Néguvon or Ruelene.

The Agricultural Code of Practice has been revised. It is no longer called a suggested code. Among the Directors of Caledonia Agricultural Society were recently advised that results of the 1973 exhibition will show financial success at least as good as any recent year.

Open House At H.S.S.

Reserve some time during the week of November 19th to 24th to come to Hagersville Secondary School Open House. Parents and friends are invited to sit in on regular classes (take part in the lesson if you like) and see what is happening.

Senior students who have a free period will greet you and act as your hosts. If you wish a guide cook's tour, you can have one; if you can stay for an hour or two, welcome.

There will be a band concert on Wednesday evening, and on Thursday afternoon, students taking Canadian History will be holding a model parliament. The public is invited to attend both events. On Friday, November 23, there will be a fall fair. A host of activities, including displays and resource people from various careers will make up a busy day. The evening will be a chance to relax, as the students hold their monthly dance. We hope to see many graduates at the dance, prior to Commencement which will be held on Saturday, November 24th at 8:15 p.m.

Everyone talks about education. The staff and students of Hagersville Secondary School invite you to come and take part in the educational experience.
