Carelessness Causes Drowning

Statistics don't make the most interesting reading, but they often reveal interesting facts. The 1973 drowning statistics, compiled by Red Cross Water Safety are no exception.

The total number of drownings -- 1339 -- was an increase of 173 over 1972. All of the increase was in age groups over 13 years of age. Parents of young children did an excellent job of supervision last year, but older children and adults became careless.

The biggest single increase -- 70 -- was in the age group 22 to 33 years of age, with the next largest increase -- 21 -- in the next oldest group, 34 to 46 years of age.

People in the prime of life, who should be the most capable of taking care of themselves, became careless. Breaking the rules of water safety is asking for tragedy.

For a safe, enjoyable summer of aquatic activity, we remind you of the basic water safety rules: Always swim with someone else, never alone. Don't dive into water you don't know.

Don't overload a boat. Always carry a government - approved personal flotation device(PFD) for every passenger. Children and poor swimmers should wear theirs at all times. Check weather reports before boat trips. Don't go if there is a storm warning. Don't mix alcohol with water.

No matter what your age, you can learn to swim with Red Cross Safety. Special adult classes teach you not only how to swim, but the techniques of personal survival and water rescue. Help defeat statistics -- keep in the swim with Red Cross Water Safety.

Tractors Kill

Each year some 90 Canadians are killed and approximately 800 others are injured, many permanently, in accidents involving farm tractors. This sobering information was released by the Canada Safety Council which, in co - operation with Agriculture Canada, sponsors Farm Safety It is estimated, by farm safety experts, that a 75% reduction in the severity of farm tractor accidents could be realized if the machines were equipped with protective frames or crush resistant cabs and seat belts were worn. These devices are available in newer models. Farmers not using machines so equipped should consult the manufacturer's representative concerning modif-The operator can do much to prevent overturn, or any other tractor accident, by observing the following basic rules.

English Abuse

We all abuse the English language far more than we realize. I am undoubtably one of the worst offenders.

I speak an unnamed dialect stemming from English which includes such deformities as dincha, yous guys (a sure sign I'm from Haldimand some newcomers say) and nice ta meet ya. My English laziness and slang really became apparent when attempting to converse with the girls who arrived in Jarvis from Japan last No wonder they had difficulty in deciphering quick "Anyplaceinparticularyouwannaseein Canada?" the first time round. And what does - "Did you feel bad" - mean to an outsider. At least all the Lions and host families seemed to be able to communicate far better than I. And I'm relieved this is a newspaper....not a radio.

Put It In Writing

The temptation is always to tell it to someone rather than write it. That's why editors and reporters often get told about a person's agreement or disagreement with a public action, an editorial viewpoint, or a public attitude.

It is interesting, but far more effective would be a letter to the editor outlining that stronglyheld view.

Sometimes we're criticized because we don't suddenly take up the cudgels for a point of view that is expressed to us. Bear in mind that issues are pressing in from many sides and our space. for comment is limited.

A simple, brief, straightforward letter to the editor with your name signed to it can be even more effective than more comment from us. Next time you're inclined to "sound off" to us, put it in a letter that we can print. That will get your point of view across and you may even feel better after having written us.

We can urge, of course, that you state your case fairly and without malice. Freedom of speech still requires some responsibility too.

(Times - Advocate, Exeter).
