

Jarvis "Passing Out" Ceremony

The municipality of Jarvis "passed out" last Wednesday with cards, dancing and a friendly get-together. Many former reeves, councillors and residents attended Jarvis' finale when George Walker, Jarvis' oldest ex-warden and reeve, Jim Davidson spoke briefly, urging everyone to get behind the City of Nanticoke and make it the best.

Mr. Davidson also outlined the highlights of each past reeve's term since council's inception in 1914.

1914 - 18: Under Ivan Holmes, this term marked the beginning of Jarvis' fire brigade.

1919 - 20: Under Charles McCarter saw the laying of the foundation for the coming of hydro.

1921 - 28: Under George Miller brought hydro and reorganization of the fire department.

1929 - 42: (the longest term) with LeMarshall in the reeve's chair saw traffic lights installed at the intersection of Highways 3 and 6.

1943 - 46: Record publisher Laird Miller led the village during and after the war.

1947 - 48: George Walker headed council when property was bought for garbage disposal and the village first started having garbage pick-up. Also, the community hall was built.

1955 - 58: Peel Street was extended during Howard Krouse's term.

1959 - 60: David McBride was reeve when Jarvis and Walpole township together built their new municipal offices.

1961 - 69: The village limits were extended and water and sewer services installed while Ernie Craddock served the village as reeve.

1970 - 73: Under the reigns of William Austin, a new maintenance building was erected by the village.

1973 - 74: Lafayette Street opened under reeve Jim Davidson's term and the transition was made from local village government to the New City of Nanticoke in regionalism.

A REMARKABLE PARALLEL

One of the remarkable men of the Court of Queen Elizabeth and her nephew King James I of England, was Sir Francis Bacon. He was a statesman and a philosopher and rose in the Court, under James, to the highest office in the land, that of Lord High Chancellor. Some people think that it was Bacon who wrote Shakespeare's plays. He also wrote a book on philosophy; the "Novum Organum".

Sir Francis was not popular with Elizabeth but rose rapidly under James. He built himself a magnificent house in London and became a wealthy man. Such a rapid rise, especially since he was not a member of any old established family, roused a good deal of jealousy and steps were taken to bring him down. After casting about for grounds of attack, they finally found it in the licensing system. No one could run a business of any kind without a licence from the Crown, which was dispersed by Sir Francis. By virtue of his office, he was also a judge.

There is no doubt that Bacon did take bribes and his defence was that he was only doing what everyone else did - but he was also a judge and judges do not take bribes. The licence law made it impossible to do business without a licence and those who wanted to do so were ready to pay large sums to get one. Two men were found as witnesses who said they had paid secretly large sums to Bacon. Parliament decided to impeach Bacon. At first Sir Francis protested his innocence but later he admitted his guilt. In his letter of confession he used practically the same words as Spiro Agnew in the States. These are: - "I do renounce all defence".

This is only a short summary of Bacon's life, but it is strange how history repeats itself.

CIAG has some good advice for people planning on driving in the United States.

They ask that their policy holders planning a trip in the U. S. to make sure that they have collision and comprehensive insurance, since some states with the no fault system do not allow recovery of physical damage losses, regardless of fault.

CIAG has filed a certificate of security with states which have introduced new forms of auto insurance, including no fault coverages. If an out of state insurer does not file such a certificate, it's policy holders may be treated as non-insured motorists, subject to a lawsuit following an accident, but with no right to sue other drivers to recover their own damages.

The U.S. Insurance Institute has done tests which show that 1974 cars are more damage-prone than last year's models. One model tested sustained $120 damage in a front 5 m.p.h. crash and $95 in a rear end crash, while the same 1973 model received no damage in the same test. With those kinds of results it is not hard to guess as to what will happen to insurance rates.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor:

Re: Wolf Bounty:
In a recent issue of the Simcoe Reformer I read an article by Mr. Valentine saying Wolf Bounty Unjustified.

It makes me wonder if the writer knows anything about Wolves at all. He says he is one of the finest predators and is a fine animal. Fine for What? I challenge him to give one (yes one) good reason for a wolf's existence in Southern Ontario.

My dictionary describes a predator as one who preys on others, and lives by preying on other animals or birds. That could mean Deer, Rabbits, possibly pheasant, partridge or any bird that roosts on the ground and are easy prey for wolves or foxes at night. No wonder we never have any pheasants when the season opens.

I suppose I should be fair and give him credit for catching some poor little field mice.

How about the possibility of him preying on domestic animals such as a calf or a small yearling steer or heifer in the pasture? Keeping the deer population under control is supposed to be one of the good points. Heavens! Has anybody seen too many deer around?

I am sure I would be safe in saying there are more wolves in these two counties than there are deer. If he will kill deer why wouldn't he take a nice domestic animal. What about a nice flock of sheep which are very vulnerable to attack by dogs or wolves. I say this from experience as I have farmed here all my life and have had as many as twenty ewes and lambs chewed up at one time and then had to be destroyed.

After you destroy the ones with no hope of recovery, you try to doctor the least injured. In warm weather and fly time you lose all your respect for roaming dogs or wolves. We blamed dogs at the time. But after a dozen wolves were shot the next winter in the immediate vicinity, you have second thoughts on who or what to blame.

Mr. Valentine is worried about the poor wolf becoming extinct. Why they are multiplying like dogs. Ten years ago you never heard tell of a wolf in the area. Now look! This year about 50 have been turned in for Bounty in the two counties.

Suppose of these 50, half of them were bitches and they each have two litters a year - say 4 or 5 to a litter (some more-some less) that means another one hundred turned loose in one year. "Become extinct rubbish!"

I say Mr. Valentine you had better forget about your petition. I commend the two councils for their action in keeping the wolf bounty.

Sunning Hill Dr.
