Calves Low

Many folk living off the farm have difficulty understanding the cause of recent bloody protests in North America, involving the slaughter of calves.

A look at this week's "On The Farm Front" might help to explain the farmer's desperation. Two local cattlemen took calves to the sales yard only to receive $1 and $3 each. (The commission charge is $1.)

This kind of return doesn't even pay for the cost of shipping, let alone allow the farmer a fair return.

Selling newly born or dropped calves is a normal part of the business for those not equipped to feed calves to market requirements.

Until recently these calves would have brought prices up to and over $100, depending on kind and potential.

The kind of dilemma presently facing local cattlemen is illustrated with two local examples. One calf delivered to the sales yard brought one dollar when sold. Commission charge amounted to one dollar. One more fortunate seller received three dollars. This gave him the handsome total of two dollars for the time and effort involved in trucking the calf to the sales yard.

Selling newly born or dropped calves is a normal part of the business for those not equipped to feed calves to market requirements. Until recently these calves have brought prices up to and over $100.00 depending on kind and potential.

Feeders, of course, at today's prices start with the expected selling price of the finished cattle. From this they would deduct expected cost of feeding and handling, etc. to arrive at the price they can afford to pay for the stock that would be put on feed.

No solution is offered here, excepting that it is obvious that the outlook for beef prices must improve or feed prices would have to be reduced before the above dilemma is resolved. World demand for and production of feed along with the increased cost of production do not suggest that lowered feed prices will occur in the near future. Farmers will understand the dilemma outlined. Hopefully the consumer will come to understand the situation which is naturally even more complex than stated above.

Federation News

by Otto Crone

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture asked the provincial government for financial assistance to help cow-calf operators stay in business without drastically cutting production and adding further to the boom - bust cycle in beef.

OFA asked Ontario Minister of Agriculture and Food to encourage cow - calf operators to cull up to 20 per cent of lower quality animals in their herds by payment of a grant of $100 per cow sold for slaughter between October 1, 1974 and March 31, 1975. Each cow culled should be replaced by a heifer calf so that herd size would be maintained and adequate beef would be available for market in 1976 - 77.

OFA also asked that cow - calf operators be given a grant of $25 per calf, whether the calf is retained in the herd or sold between October 1 and December 31, 1974.

OFA is also asking the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and food to undertake a study to show costs of production and determine whether or not beef raising is practical, given the costs producers now face in Ontario.

Cow - calf beef operators are entitled to know what is expected of them in this difficult time and what prospects are in store for them. They need to know these prospects as soon as possible. A pause is needed in beef production. However, OFA would not like to see a drastic reduction in Ontario's ability to produce beef.

the federation has asked for a $100 payment per cow culled. To offset the high cost of borrowing for feed, OFA is asking a $25 payment per calf of the 74 crop. These payments would be made to producers registered for production of beef.

These amounts should enable cow - calf operators to pay taxes and stay in business. OFA says indications are that in 1976 - 77, markets will open up again and Ontario should be in a position to produce its share of the market at that time. The present situation has been brought on by a rapid escalation in grain, prices which has made feeding beef cattle uneconomical.

High oil prices have forced many countries to reduce imports of beef to conserve currency to pay the necessary oil bill. These are the factors that have led to a world surplus of beef - surplus in the sense that there isn't money available in importing countries to purchase the amount they would like to buy.

OFA is maintaining close contact with Ontario Beef Improvement Association in an effort to help cow-calf men.

Steal A Bridge

Stealing bridges no less! Two people were charged last week by the Simcoe O.P.P. for attempting to steal a steel bridge which the City of Nanticoke was replacing. Engineer Ed Coates was requested to go and identify it.
