To do with a Million

Two Selkirk area farmers were discussing what they would do if they were lucky enough to win the Million Dollar Lottery. The first farmer decided that he would travel and see the world. The second farmer hesitated for a moment, then said, "I reckon I'd just keep farming till the million was all used up!"

Mr. Brown said that he found all the development taking place in the Jarvis area to be very exciting. "In a few years, many people in this area, may not remember when it was all fields around here," he said. CHILD ABUSE - A Serious Problem - Everyone's Responsibility.

Child Abuse, the physical and or emotional mistreatment of a minor, has always been with us, but only recently has it come to be considered, rightly, as a matter for public concern. In 1974, in Ontario, eleven children died as a result of physical abuse, usually by a parent. Nobody really knows of course, how many children endure maltreatment without intervention on anybody's part. From 1971 to today, six serious cases of child abuse were reported to the Family & Children's Services of Norfolk County. Three of these cases came to light in 1975. Does this mean that child abuse in Norfolk is on the increase? It may be so, but we do know that citizens in our area have been exhibiting increased concern in social problems. The important thing is that no such problem be left to "solve itself." The result of such inaction can be the death of a child.

More children under the age of two years are abused than those in any other age category. These children are particularly helpless to effect a change in their situation.

They are totally reliant on relatives, neighbours, friends, doctors and nurses to take action on their behalf.

They most often do not come to the attention of school authorities. In all situations, whether of chronic neglect and malnutrition, or verbal physical or sexual mistreatment, you may call the Family & Children's Services offices in Simcoe, who, under The Child Welfare Act, have the authority and responsibility to take immediate protective action for the child.

Experience has shown us that most abusive parents and their children can be helped. It is a very rare parent who truly wants to hurt his child. Most often, he or she "just cannot help themselves." They are, invariably, desperately unhappy people who need assistance almost as much as their offspring does. Often they are relieved when a social worker contacts them.

In some cases the child is temporarily removed from the home while the parents attempt to sort out their problems through counseling and perhaps other practical assistance.

In other situations, the child remains with his parents. A therapeutic program is drawn up for the family, which may include the services of a psychiatrist, social worker, public health nurse and the Lynwood Family Centre. Usually the family can remain intact, but if necessary, we can seek temporary, and in rare instances, permanent custody of the child through Family Court. We work with the whole family, but even if the family situation cannot be improved, the child himself no longer suffers an unendurable situation. That is, in the cases that are known to us. In today's society, where stress is a factor in everyone's life, child abuse may be on the increase. Norfolk is well-prepared to deal effectively with child abuse, thanks to the many excellent social and health services available to us. There are two obstacles between the help available and the unhappy families and children among us. These are parents who are unwilling or afraid to seek treatment, and persons aware of an abused child who are unwilling or afraid to "become involved." It is my hope that through this letter and the co-operation of the press, we can increase the understanding of people, first, of the ways in which we can help, and secondly of our need for their co-operation.

Treatment of this serious problem is the responsibility of the Family & Children's Services. Your responsibility as a citizen of our community and region is to report it.

Mary Alice Reid
President,
Family & Children's Services of Norfolk.

Alcohol and Crime

Ontario's jails are getting overloaded with alcoholics due to lack of proper treatment centres according to one Toronto based group.

The National Parole Board of Canada was told by the Church of Scientology's task force on alcoholism that there is an urgent need for a complete study of the relationship between alcohol and crime. The group pointed out that in 1974 in Ontario, one out of every five convictions inside an Ontario jail was for liquor offense. At $28.00 a day per person they say, the problem is costing taxpayers millions of dollars each year.

The presentation was made concerning a man now being held in Toronto's Don Jail, Tim Archambault, who the group say should be placed in an alcoholic centre not jail. Archambault says the group, has a severe alcoholism problem and typifies thousands like him. Spokesman for the group, Pat Marano, claims recent federal statistics indicate 58 per cent of provincial correctional institution population have a drinking problem.

In Metro Toronto 44,000 charges alone were laid for alcoholic related crimes, amounting to almost half of the total charges, and a quarter of the total arrests for the year 1974.

Alcoholism says the group, is a social problem and not a mental disorder. Psychiatric techniques such as aversion therapy do nothing more than degrade the individual and torture him into a fleeting submission. They believe what is needed is legislation that will bring a new type of centre into existence that will offer medical treatment, a re-socialization for the individual using communication and understanding.

If this type of centre existed in Ontario we could look forward to a brighter future, said Marano. Until something positive is done the tax-payers dollar will continue to be thrown down the drain.

One foot in the furrow' by Bob Trotter

Letters are appreciated by Bob Trotter, Eldale Rd. Elmira, Ont. N3B 2C7

It must be difficult to be a beef producer these days. On one hand, the provincial government's cow-calf stabilization program appears attractive. On the other hand, the Ontario Beef Improvement Association's secretary-manager is screaming at farmers to beware of subsidies of any kind.

Throughout all this, the politicians are making all kinds of promises as the Ontario election campaign gets into gear. Bob Nixon and his Liberals and Stephen Lewis and his New Democrats are making some headway, especially the NDP with that party's farm program.

The Conservatives, meanwhile, are standing on their record of having some of the best farm legislation in Canada or, perhaps, in the world. Unfortunately, since Bill Stewart, Ontario's agricultural minister, decided to retire from politics because of his recent heart attack, the PC's appear to be a little rudderless in rural policies at the moment. Mr. Stewart can hardly make any promises now since he won't be around to fulfil them and no one knows who his successor will be.

The beef farmers of Ontario have been notoriously independent over the years. Although legislation for a marketing board is available, the beef improvement association has been wary of any idea which would see them lose some of this independence.

Graeme Hedley, a spokesman for the association, has been quoted many times as saying that subsidies can — and usually do — hurt the farmer eventually. He has a great deal of knowledge and a great many statistics to back up his claims, too. He sees the beef industry here as part of the international picture, especially as a North American market.

Canadian beef men, he maintains, could cut their own throats by accepting large subsidies because American legislation now allows the Yanks to complain if a product is being imported there from a country which is subsidizing production of the commodity. This can escalate into a border-blocking move which could prevent Canadian cattle being sold across the line.

And Canadian producers need the American market more than the American market needs them, he claims. He's probably right. More important, he feels the philosophy of accepting government subsidies and handouts is a dangerous philosophy, dangerous to the social structure of Canada and farmers.

Cattlemen, he maintains, must simply learn to live with the cycle of high-low prices and not go to the governments with hats in hand asking to be bailed out.

Graeme Hedley is an articulate, intelligent man. He predicts that the so-called exotic breeds from Europe have had their heyday and the smaller, stockier British breeds are the best because they fatten easier and better on forage. Feed grain, he says, will remain at exorbitantly high levels for at least four or five years and forage-fed cattle will be much cheaper to produce.

At the same time as Mr. Hedley was imploring beefmen not to count on government subsidies, the major cow-calf producers in Ontario were knocking each other over trying to register for the province's beef calf stabilization program. In the Grey-Bruce area, the leading beef producing counties in the province, more than 80 per cent of the cow-calf men were expected to sign for the program.

Some producers have held back because they do not yet understand the complicated pricing system. Not being a beef producer, I haven't studied it but agricultural representatives tell me it is relatively simple.

If prices fall below 40 cents a pound, the farmer registered in the program will end up with $38.25 for each cow. The $38.25 comes about by subtracting the first 10 cents a pound difference between the floor price and the actual price paid. Another 15 per cent is deducted because Ontario's guessperts calculate a cow herd will yield an 85 per cent calf drop: That's $38.25. Then, deduct $5 per cow as a registration fee and you get $33.25.

Understand? It takes a little time when you are as bad a mathematician as I am.

However, the producers are going for it in a big way in spite of Mr. Hedley's warnings.
