

A Willow tree's branches fly with the wind on the farm of Jack Vrankx of R.R.# 1 Langton. At the peak of the storm the winds reached 70 miles per hour.

Clean up operations began early Tuesday morning as shop owners along the beach frontscrape away sand left after the Lake receded.

Debris lies everywhere following Monday's storm which ripped through the area. This photograph is taken about 1,000 feet away from the shoreline of Lake Erie at Port Dover.

An Omen Of The Season Ahead ?

What was once a fun house in Port Dover is now the scene of sorrow as Monday's storm left substantial damages to the face of the building.

A huge limb hangs dangerously above 14th concession, north-east of Langton. The limb, ripped from its mother tree by 70 mile-an-hour winds, appears ready to fall on some unaware traveller.

A ten foot wide gorge remains at Long Point following serious flooding Monday. In the back round of the photo is a small body of water that was unable to get back into Lake Erie.
