Tourism in Ontario could hold it's own

Despite a disturbed economy compounded by higher gasoline prices both here and in the U.S., Ontario tourism could still hang in this year on a travel spending par with 1974 which topped $2 billion.

An increase, however, is unlikely for the first time in many years.

This forecast was made by Industry and Tourism Minister Claude Bennett at a time when world travel generally is plagued by inflation and restraints which are more and more restricting extended vacations to the wealthy and the package tourist.

Drawing his findings from a survey conducted in Canada, the U. S. and overseas by the ministry's tourism research branch, the minister suggested that the number of U.S. visitors may also hold this year, a figure which in 1974 nudged 23 million, with nearly one-third remaining for one or more nights.

But Mr. Bennett is watching gasoline prices both here and in the U.S. with a concerned eye for, he said, the recent cost hikes—even without projected new ones—will have a negative psychological effect on tourism in Canada and, therefore, Ontario which last year exceeded its goal of 54 per cent of the American market share by two per cent.

"Should this psychological effect heighten," said the minister, "it is possible that many visitors will be less likely to come by car and those who do might be less inclined to travel about the province."

The Minister said Ontario may not see any growth in total expenditure in this most challenging of recent years, adding that it would be an achievement even to match last year.

"But how can we tell at this early stage," he asked. "We are receiving mixed reports from across the province and it still is premature to make proper assessment. I only know that our travel inquiries are up substantially over last year and that our travel literature is rapidly being gobbled up—one good omen in a tough year."

Because of hard times in the U.S., the minister said a number of Americans may not get to visit their favourite Ontario holiday resorts this year. "There are others who appear to be reducing their normal vacation time by half with the intention of resuming their regular length of stay when the economy improves," said Mr. Bennett. "In the meantime Canadians are taking up much of the slack."

At the same time, he noted, Ontarians are doing more in-province travelling and finding new vacation areas close to home.

The minister said it is expected that the number of overseas visitors to this province will again increase as will their expenditures.

"The skyrocketing cost of travel overseas is causing more and more Europeans to look for more affordable holiday destinations in other parts of the world," the minister added, "and Ontario today is certainly one of them."

It's going to take Toronto disc-jockey Mike Cooper the next three weeks to spin himself a world record, riding virtually non-stop aboard a Ferris Wheel at the Canadian National Exhibition. If the 23 year old broadcaster, a native of Hamilton, Ont., breaks the current American held record (21 days, 3 hours and 55 minutes), he'll win himself a place in the Guinness Book of Records plus an Austin Marina 2-door coupe.

Young people involved in high number of farm accidents

The majority of farm accidents involve teen-agers and young adults under 30 years of age, the Farm Safety Association of Ontario reports.

Preliminary data for 1974 reveal that of the 471 reported accidents in Ontario's tobacco industry, 283, or about 60 percent, occurred in the 10 to 30 year old age group. The figures show that in the general farming sector 224 of 491 mishaps, about 46 percent took place in this age group.

J.K. Weeden, agricultural engineer with the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, says one reason for the high incidence of accidents involving the young is that the shortage of farm labour in some areas has resulted in many people taking part in farm work without previous knowledge or experience of farming, such as younger brothers or city cousins.

"The problem is that young people are not prepared for farm machinery. It's bigger and more complicated than ever before, and the kids simply don't know how to operate it," Mr. Weeden says.

One of the ways to reduce youthful accident statistics is through training. He lists a few pointers for both farmers and newcomers to the farm.

Tractors are more a part of farm accidents than any other piece of equipment. Agreat many of these accidents are caused by faulty or improper shielding of the power takeoff. Mr. Weeden advises farmers to ensure that shields or guards are in place and "properly lubricated."

Before any repairs or adjustments to equipment are made, make absolutely sure the PTO has been shut off. If, for example, the baler has become clogged, do not attempt to clear it without first disengaging the power takeoff. This rule extends to all other machinery as well, turn it off before making adjustments or repairs.

High tractor speeds lead to serious accidents in the form of side roll overs. Speed induced accidents are a particular problem with the under 20 year olds. Farmers should emphasize that tractors must be driven at low speeds.

Mr. Weeden advises farmers to follow the example of other industries and provide 15 minute coffee breaks in the morning and afternoon. "It's a known fact that accidents are often caused by fatigue and boredom," he says.

Farm workers should be instructed to wear personal safety equipment. Hard hats, gloves, and steel toed boots reduce the risk of serious injury. The wearing of loose fitting clothing around operating machinery should be discouraged.

"Training is just a matter of taking the time to show a person how to operate a piece of equipment," Mr. Weeden emphasizes. "And it will pay off in the long run by helping to reduce physical injury and economic loss."

Girl stabbed in Port Dover

Chief Arthur H. McCart of the Haldimand-Norfolk Regional Police Force announced that seventeen year old Cathy Wagenaar, Port Dover Ontario was stabbed while walking on King Street in Simcoe at approximately 11:50 p.m., Thursday August 14, 1975.

Miss Wagenaar is listed in fair condition in Norfolk General Hospital. Police are continuing the search for a male suspect described as late teens, early twenties, 5 foot 7 inches to 9 inches, medium build, dark shoulder length hair, denim clothing. Police are requesting any person who may have information regarding this occurrence or observed anyone fitting this description to contact any division of the H-N police.
