H-N Region Inaugurated

And on Friday evening, January 4th, Haldimand County welcomed 1200 guests in the Hagersville Secondary School auditorium.

Friday's celebration not only marked the union of the two 120-year-old counties, but also "the climax of an important experiment in democracy," John White, minister of intergovernmental affairs told the packed audience.

Region Adopts Crest

CAYUGA -- Regional council last week approved this design as the official crest of the region.

The work of regional draughtsman Bob Crow, it shows six bricks on a parapet depicting the six new municipalities created from the 28 former municipalities which are illustrated by 28 maple leaves.

Haldimand County Terminates

The final chapter in the 124 year history of Haldimand County government came to an end last Friday.

It was marked by plaque presentations, a dinner and reminiscing. The only business was Former warden plaque recipients from the West Haldimand area were Roger Dennis (1943), Ross Fleming (1951), Alec Blackwell (1952), George Walker (1954), Sydney Cronk (1964), Cecil Johnson (1966), Edward Montague (1967), William Oster (1968), Ernest Craddock (1969) and Clare Kindy (1970).

Walpole Celebrates 125th & End Of Era

It's a party for everyone this Friday night in the Hagersville Secondary School when Walpole celebrates 125 years as a township and the close of an era.

On April 1st, Walpole will become part of the City of Nanticoke in the new Haldimand-Norfolk region. It may come as a surprise to some, but Walpole's no stranger to Norfolk. During the reign of King George III Walpole was declared part of Norfolk. It was not until 1850 Walpole (named after Sir Robert Walpole who was prime

Jarvis could be wiped out by development

The village of Jarvis could be wiped out by the development of the new Townsend city site.

This was given as one of the reasons for deferment of a subdivision for Jarvis, at a City of Nanticoke council meeting last week. The subdivision would provide 212 single family lots, 30 linked home lots, and 225 multiple family dwellings.

Another reason given for the deferment was the lack of water and sewer services in the village, but if the Ontario government proceeds with part or all of the Townsend development, then any new development in Jarvis would likely stand still for many years.

Chairman of Nanticoke's Planning Advisory Committee George Dmetriuc said that if commercial shopping plazas are built on the satellite city property near Jarvis, that it could wipe out the present Jarvis shopping area.

The sub division application for property near Jarvis is located on lots two and three, concession seven of Walpole and fronts on Highway 6. The application of Algrove Consultants Limited was on behalf of a Greater York Group.

Committee Chairman Dmetriuc said Jarvis could be serviced if necessary but the village may become part of the Townsend site.

City of Nanticoke Mayor, John Pow commented that he was very concerned for the future of the village of Jarvis.

Councillor Ken Porteous complained that the region and the Ontario government have the authority in planning.

"We cannot know what to do in Jarvis because we are not in control of our own destinies," he said.
